A Compliment

First it was Baird, then Doherty, now Baird again.

This merry-go-round of All-College presidents threatened to throw the All-College Cabinet into confusion as the draft threw its monkey wrench into student activities programs. The present president, Robert D. Baird '42 joined the naval air corps because he could not evade the draft, was honorably discharged with a recommendation from the corps commander to the draft board for Baird's deferment, then received 2-A classification a few days ago.

However, a grand gesture by Gerald F. Doherty '42, All-College president for three weeks, alleviated all fears that Cabinet might have experienced in attempting to clarify the situation.

When Doherty resigned, he placed all selfish interests below his desire to further Penn State government. Although many students would covet the position of All-College president, few would resign in favor of one who officially was selected as the student's choice.

As a compliment to Doherty's executive ability, his short term as All-College president was better organized and his meetings more capably handled than most of his predecessors. The All-College Cabinet recognized his spirit of leadership, and we, in turn, laud him for his outstanding leadership in an important position.

We Add A Milestone

Another milestone in stimulating student-faculty relations was accomplished this week with the appointment of Dan A. DeMarino as assistant dean of men.

Burdened with the personal and scholastic problems of the entire male student body, Dean A. R. Warnock was bothered with many trivial matters which interfered with his attacking larger student problems. Under the new setup, Dean Warnock will be able to concentrate upon more urgent duties.

With DeMarino acting as the dean's contact man among student organizations on campus, student attitudes and situations will be better interpreted and understood. What had been a two or three-man job has been eased with the addition of DeMarino to the dean's office.

DeMarino's qualifications as an assistant dean of men have been shown by his organizing the men's dormitory groups into a well-knit independent unit. His sympathetic and competent guidance of these men indicates his ability to "talk things over with the boys," fraternity and non-fraternity men alike.

Hail To The Lion

The Nittany Lion is on guard! Crouching on the second floor of Old Main, the powerful mountain lion, as sculptured by Heinz Warneke, characterizes the symbolic watchfulness and fearlessness of the famed Nittany Lion.

This 600-pound plaster model, placed in Old Main until Spring, will serve as the model for the legendary Nittany Lion which will guard the Penn State campus. Warneke will begin work on the lion next Spring when weather permits students to watch him at work.

ONE MAN'S MEAT

It is unfortunate that the mistakes of the College Health Service staff are usually irremediable. It is also unfortunate that protests can be made only too late.

How many times have you sat in the Dispensary and seen a student, bleeding from six places, come flying in for treatment, only to be given the routine questioning and asked to sit down like a gentleman and wait his turn?

Or have they sent you home with a fever, telling you to be sure and come back later in the day for a re-examination? That's a lot of fun when you're coming down with grippe and it's raining cats and coeds outside.

Or has your illness been diagnosed as a stomach ache, and have you then made a hurried trip to have an inflamed appendix ripped out at the last minute?

I am a firm believer in socialized medicine. Sometimes the College Health Service makes me wonder if my trust is warranted. I am sure, however, that a larger staff, with more time and better equipment, would make fewer, less costly mistakes.

At $10 a head, the Health Service should receive upwards of $60,000. Which is a lot of hay in any man's stable. Besides that pile, I can remember the days when the Health Service didn't make a cent from students, outside of a two-bits a bottle for Stokes' Expectorant. And it managed to get by just as well (or poorly) in those barren times. Has the College withdrawn that support?

So how about it, Doc? We're tired of hearing that "there is no epidemic." We don't want any epidemics. We don't like to pay five bucks a head each semester just to sit in the Dispensary while our noses bleed, eyes water, and broken bones stick out. Sure, we get our cough medicine free. Does that 60-second examination really make sure it's a cold we've got?

Bob's Back

I noted by the papers, some weeks ago, that Cabinet was preparing a testimonial for Bob Baird, complimenting him on his short-lived but well-run administration. Instead of wasting the paper and ink, I suggest that Gerry Doherty's name be substituted. The praise wouldn't be going to someone who was undeserving.

By the downcast look on the faces of that sex-conscious crowd after taking the Psych 416 blue-book yesterday, it might be assumed that Penn State students aren't as up on their facts of life as I thought. Maybe it's just the technical words that fooled 'em.

Work On Carnegie Hall To Finish In November

Overcoming a series of delays in procuring materials and labor for the completion of the remodeling of old Carnegie Library, George W. Ebert, head of the Grounds and Buildings Department, announced yesterday, "I have every reason to believe that the building will be finished by the next 30 days."

Ebert pointed out that the College had hoped to have the building completed by September 15 but due to national defense, some of the materials were not delivered until last week. Labor problems have also hampered the work.

Kellond Views ROTC

Approval of the military appearance and attitude of the Penn State ROTC units was expressed by Colonel Frederick G. Kellond, regular army officer in charge of ROTC, and National Guard, of the third corps area, in his recent visit to Penn State it was announced by Colonel Ardery last night.
