Women Vital In Defense Jobs

Women are playing a new part in the nation's defense-the part of labor in defense industries.

Women, according to federal reports, are helping to build Army and Navy dive bombers, high explosive shell fuses in government arsenals, and millions of rounds of machine gun and small arms ammunitions. Aircraft engine plants find women indispensible for inspecting and assembling intricate electrical instrument parts.

Other jobs utilizing the feminine touch are aircraft factories where women cover oil lines, upholster pilot headrests, and spray paint. Hundreds of skilled women workers produce time fuses.

Government reports reveal that ammunition plants reaches nearly 30,000, in aviation industries 8,000, and Recreation. and at least 5,000 in government
