Xmas Brought To Rural Homes

Farmer Brown last year went out and cut a large Christmas tree for his children, but found it looked bare when he tried to stretch his whole supply of decorations over its branches; his children played "Santa Claus" and tried to amuse themselves the same way throughout the year; they might have sung carols but they didn't always have the words.

Farmer Brown this year may hope to see an entirely different picture because of efforts by College groups in teaching the children to create more of a Christmas atmosphere in their homes.

Wattle, Stony Point, and Sellers may sound like names of anything except little one-room schoolhouses, but it is in these that a Community Service committee plans to teach the children how to plan Christmas programs and carry them out, how to make decorations; and give them information for singing carols, reciting and so forth.

The project is being sponsored by the arts class of Miss Amy

G. Gardner, associate professor of home economics and art education, and the PSCA Community Service committee under Kenneth F. Moist '43. Phyllis N. Schluderberg '42 is chairman of the arts class group.

Visits have been made to two of the schoolhouses, Stony Point and Sellers, and a group plans to give first instructions at the Wattle school this afternoon. Each of the three will be visited at least once each week until Christmas vacation.
