An Opportunity

Making an effort to continue full-time activities during the Summer semester, the Penn State Club has begun an extensive campaign to enroll upperclass members.

The Club, on the basis of benefit offered to the non-fraternity man, has been tremendously successful during the past several years. In mentioning a few of its assets, one cannot overlook the large social room in Old Main, where Club members can enjoy most of the privileges and opportunities offered by any fraternity.

Recognized as the most active independent men's organization, the Club has justified its standing by making several commendable contributions each year. First of all, the dancing classes have always been of definite aid to a number of students who could not dance and who wanted an inexpensive, yet very effective, means of learning to dance.

Each Spring, the Club has made an award to the outstanding non-fraternity senior—bestowing that honor on Gerald F. Doherty '42, All-College vice-president, last year.

Now, with the drop in College enrollment, the Club is threatened with a serious decrease in membership. Of course, the influx of freshmen within the next two weeks will provide a definite booster for the organization; but still every non-fraternity upperclassman should seriously consider the thought of joining the Club.

As present members say, "Just drop around to the club room and be convinced for yourself."

Cooperation, Please

Looking ahead with our typical optimism and faith in human nature we yesterday advanced the tentative plans for "Victory Weekend," a gala weekend of entertainment and relaxation. Today we find the original promoters of the plan still eager to carry out their proposal. However, we also find that a big obstacle has been placed before them. Non-cooperation by an organization supposedly composed of select campus leaders may be responsible for the downfall of a really fine and sincere undertaking.

It is hoped that reconsideration by the group will result in complete agreement with the tremendous undertaking which will combine a big dance, a carnival, a Thespian show, a fraternity stunt circus, and a second night smaller-scale dance.

As previously announced, the proposed recreational promotion is scheduled for July. Although misinterpreted so by some, the gigantic program is not synonymous with Soph Hop which will be held on July 10. The two weekends will be separate and will in no way conflict with each other.

With this clarification plainly made and with the primary interest in "Victory Weekend" still strong enough to make it a success, the only drawback lies in the action or rather in the inaction of the blocking organization.

Justifying An Action

Several people on campus, who thought that white-wash advertising had been definitely banned, have now called Collegian on the carpet for using such signs on College sidewalks.

White-wash advertising is permitted—only if All-College Cabinet sanctions it—with further reservations that both discrimination in locating the signs and neatness of painting are taken into consideration.

Through The Needle's Eye

We've been perched on the camel's front hump this week, while Vulcan has been making armor plate to protect us from the other columnists on this paper. Ferdy, our whimsical young inch who wants to take a mile all the time, has been checking on our comments about Mortar Board. Campy condescended to swipe a joke we used on Good Friday. Not that it's really such a bad one, you understand, but once a year is enough. And in the meanwhile we've been looking at this Summer semester of ours.

Most important, because of the need for immediate action, we saw The Daily Collegian threatened with dissolution. We saw kids who have spent three hard years "making out" in one of the toughest eliminations on campus, see not only their very organization about to crumble, but also the loss of the cash which to most meant rent, food and fees and still decide to do their utmost for their school. Then we looked where the needle pointed and saw a sign that said:

It's up to you!

The camel nudged us and we saw Mars chuckling over by the Golden Gate, to make us remember that this Summer semester is Penn State's major contribution to the war effort. Doolittle "dood it" over Tokyo, and then we had to go to class to care for our cranium for our country. On the classroom door was a sign which said:

It's up to you!

Then we read Gordon Coy's editorial in this newspaper yesterday which said that there were people on this campus who wanted to have a big weekend for a number of purposes: to give recreation to those who are in Penn State's War Semester; to provide a means whereby every student in the College could make a defense contribution, physical or financial, to help this campus and this country.

We envisioned a tremendous undertaking, involving all the campus organizations: the Blue Band, as well as Mortar Board. IFC and Panhe, IMA and IWA—every organized group on campus can offer something when a democracy decides to join hands for its own good. There's something to think about: a carnival, dances, music, dramatics, entertainment of every kind, laughter and relaxation, as well as a contribution to your country. It can be done. You, the All-College Cabinet, freshman and senior, every last man and woman could do it.

It's up to YOU!
