.Administration Gets ${f A}$ ${f `3'}$

SEVENTY PER CENT was passing back in high school. Here at College 70 per cent is ten percentage points above passing. And in reference to faculty salaries which were recently set at 70 per cent for the months of July and August, the same comparison is applicable. This figure is considerably above passing and yet not perfect.

With carefully planned budgets and schedules muddled in the rush of the accelerated program, the Administration has tackled the problem of faculty salaries and has emerged with a commendable answer when compared to similar solutions reached by other college and university administrations all over the country.

Back in January, administrative and faculty circles were strongly agreed that Penn State should adopt the speed-up plan as its contribution to the war effort. They went ahead and made plans for everything except the matter of staff salaries. Hardly could they plan for this when one of the main sources of income, student fee payments, was unestimatible. However, they all knew that enrollment would certainly drop off and with it salaries would have to follow. Consequently they agreed upon a plan whereby salaries would be set in proportion to student enrollment and fee income as soon as this could bedetermined.

Now that proportion has determined the 70 per cent figure. Only through cutting corners and · raiding hoarded reserves has the Administration been able to make July and August salaries this high. Heavily endowed schools of the East and at least one large state university in the mid-West are requesting their Summer staff to continue without any additional compensation. And innumerable institution's faculties are to be paid at rates of 40 to 50 per cent. It is true that few are getting a rate better than 70 per cent.

Although this figure may not wholly equal the earning power of the faculty during July and August of other years, it certainly is a favorable compensation and more than meets the staff halfway in this mutual problem.

On our grade sheet the administration rates a "3." We believe in marking on a curve.

A Worm's Eye View ...

At Long Last—

After many months things have started cooking. Penn State has begun to get the idea that this country is at war. Members of the dean of women's office went the rounds at sorority meetings Monday night and reminded sorority women that this was war. Now that coeds are on the in. we'd like to put forth a couple of inches on the subject.

Coeds were told that Miss Ray had a list of defense organizations that could use some of their spare money, if any. And we're saying that since everyone knows this is war, maybe a daily coke really isn't essential. The same thought could be applied to cigarettes, new nail polish, and suntan lotion. (We have to give the women credit for not wearing stockings, but we think the sun would do just as good a job as that artificial

We're On The Beam—

And that ain't all. The College draft committee is doing its best to see that students finish college before they're drafted. This seems like a good incentive for them to take this business of getting an education seriously. We've noticed that there has been more than the usual amount of class-cutting this Summer, and we're hoping that from here on in students won't allow a little thing like the weather to keep them from realizing that this is a war we're in.

As far as we can see, the profs haven't been cutting classes lately. Not much, anyway. Through the accelerated program, cuts in salaries, gas rationing, and rise in food prices, they've been pretty good eggs. We've seen some of them putting their cars into garages, hitching up their sons' bicycles, and hitting the road for their classes. (They walk when it rains. They also walk when the kid wants the bicycle.)

Let's Stay There—

What we're getting at is this: Everyone has been helping students to get through the Summer semester and to get college degrees before the draft interferes. And we're hoping that they'll take advantage of it. This means celebrating the Fourth of July, not by going home three days early, but by attending classes until 5 o'clock Friday. The profs won't be cutting, boys and girls. They know that this is war. So don't let them down.

Obviously, we don't believe that this can be repeated too often: Attend classes, cut down on superfluous activities, support defense projects, and keep in the sun. By the way, do you have a date for Victory Weekend?
