Political Parade

The mad-cap sophomore class tangle that has been capturing the political spotlight seems rather certain to be a record-breaker—if it would only stay stationary long enough to be compared with existing records.

The campaign is still a couple hours off, but at this point three parties have already handed in a total of 13 petitions endorsing 10 different candidates.

Sixty-four dollar question: What class was it which, one week ago, was entirely unable to whip up a political fight?

Postscript

His name has once more been withdrawn from the junior class treasurer race in favor of another candidate.

He's plugging away as campaign manager for a hybrid group that lost its official identity on the ballot through a coalition with Independents '45.

His new allies are members of the clique he had worked for two years to crush, and had finally almost completely succeeded.

Walter C. Price, ex-head of the mighty Campus '45 political machine, is fast fading from Penn State's political limelight. Long may he study in peace.

Trick Of The Trade

One of the neatest bits of politicking in many a day—the plug St. Clair got over the radio during the Penn game. The Independents had every opportunity to do ditto doubly, but then who ever thought that a sportscaster would mention that one of the football players was also a candidate for class office?

Senior Struggle

The hokus-pokus of new parties and cross-breed slates is admittedly interest-attracting, but for a straight-laced, old-fashioned political battle, the senior class deserves an unanimous award.

Two hard-working presidential candidates, backed by two well-organized, battle-wise cliques, are putting on an exhibition of an almost professional calibre.

It's the last college campaign for both the candidates and their cliques, and they both seem to be concentrating on this race as their all-out effort.

Political Pickups

Reports from the battlefield: That one of the upperclass cliques was seen by a former politician—an ex-expert at handling campaign expenditures—going over its budget limit...

Blakeslee Urges Full Use Of Student Franchise In Three-Day Balloting

"Penn State is a testing ground for democracy," Jerome C. Blakeslee, All-College president, stated last night, as he called upon students to exercise their franchise in the voting that begins at 12:30 p. m. today.

Following is the complete text of the All-College president's statement:

"A new group of student leaders will soon take over in All-College Cabinet to direct the policies of student life. These student leaders will undoubtedly be faced with even more perplexing problems than have been the present members of Cabinet.

"It is up to the student body to elect those students best qualified to carry out these responsibilities. As All-College President I call on you students to exercise your franchise in the All-College elections starting today at 12:30 p. m. in Old Main. Penn State is a testing ground for democracy. You can do your part to make democracy work at Penn State by casting your vote today, tomorrow or Thursday."

Davis Asks Students To Insure Representation By Casting Ballot

Urging a turnout of voters that will justify the College administration's action in permitting the continuance of politics, Donald W. Davis 43, Elections Committee chairman, issued the following election-eve statement:

"Today, tomorrow and Thursday Penn State students will go to the polls and vote for class and All-College officers for the coming year. I hope they go in large numbers and wisely select those students who will best carry on Penn State student government in the trying year ahead of us—a year that is bound to be full of problems and changes in student life.

Voting will be held in the first floor lounge of Old Main; only matriculation cards will be necessary for voting. The officers elected will be represent you in the year to come. Make sure they truly represent your wishes by casting your vote.

ed slates, identical except for the treasurership.

Price, who bolted the party he formerly bossed to become a candidate for treasurer on the Campus-Mixed ticket, paved the way for the coalition of political forces when he withdrew in favor of William C. Humphries, the Independent candidate.

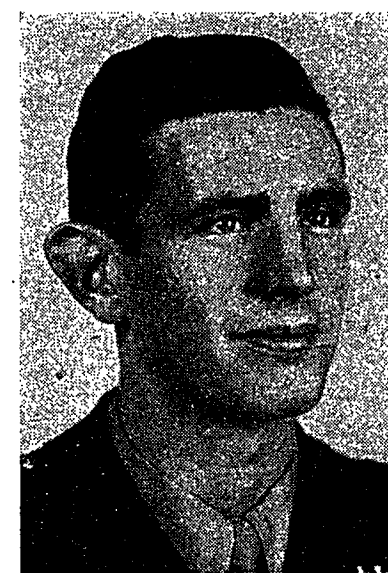

George W. Smith's V-Party, after folding up last week when Robert Dennison, vice-presidential candidate, was disqualified for poor scholarship, staged a revival over the weekend when Smith found himself a new running-mate.

After a hurry-up hunt for the required 200 petition signers, Smith presented the elections committee with the credentials for the other half of his slate and re-entered the contest. New Victory Party candidate for All-College vice-president is Charles D. Aikman.

Asked yesterday to comment on the rapid-fire changes in the political scene, Elections Chairman Donald W. Davis termed it a "good omen" in Penn State student government.

"It's indicative of increased interest in our governmental setup," Davis said, "and certainly shows a lot of political skill and ingenuity."

"It's encouraging to know that our political system is geared to accommodate such originality," the elections boss added.

Football Schedule

Nittany Lion football schedules for both 1943 and 1944—which may never be played—were released over the weekend by Neil M. Fleming, graduate manager of athletics.

"The fulfillment of the schedule," stated Fleming, "naturally depends upon the war situation involving transportation and other difficulties."

Temple, Georgia, Michigan State, Navy, and Maryland are new opponents on the 1943 schedule. Pennsylvania, Cornell, West Virginia, and Lehigh have been dropped.

is reporting privately that she could run the clique better than the regular party boss...

That one of the All-College candidates is 1-A with Uncle Sam...

That fines are awaiting certain of the cliques for not including the All-College averages on candidates' petitions...

That Campus '45's new clique chairman turned partially gray-haired last week trying to think of some way to nab a ray or two of the spotlight from the opposition forces...

That the non-fraternity man doesn't get more consideration in politics because he's not willing to earn it by coming out to vote...

That, after the present battle has spent itself, all clique chairmen may automatically be re-classified under 4-F. More parties and the fear of more parties are said to be creating nervous wrecks.
