

$6.50 For Tribute

 tainties when it sponsors a dance. But the point is this: since the avowed purpose of the affair was to raise money for the Infantile Paralysis fund it would seem that the committee could have drawn up a plan which would have insured them a bigger profit for the "March of Dimes."

The largest item on the bill was the money paid to the band. Union laws prevent a band from giving free services at an affair that charges an admission price. That could easily have been gotten around and the band could have donated its services if admission had been free and donations were collected, instead. This would probably have netted more in the long run, as is proved by the Hillel Foundation's President's Birthday Ball, held two weeks ago. No admission was charged at Hillel's vic dance, but donations collected throughout the evening totalled $12.

It was a good idea, but unfortunately the sponsors had too many irons in the fire. More attention should have been paid to the March of Dimes, with a little less emphasis on the publicity angle.

Penn State Rats Stick Their Tails In Human Diet

 equipped with a tail quite as long as its body.

The rat on experiment is kept in an individual cage 12x8x6 inches in size that is furnished with a food cup and a water cup and—uh—anything else the rat may need. Fresh food and water are added daily, the reserve rat food being kept in a large refrigerator. The food is weighed with an analytical balance and meted out to each rat individually. The cages and their occupants are inspected daily by one of the eight faculty members and technicians who take care of the rats. Cages are sterilized with live steam in a room especially designed for this purpose. Persons with head colds are not permitted to associate with the rats.

Ah, for the life of a rat at Penn State!
