

Penn Statements

By SERENE ROSENBERG

Some gave quizzes, some dutifully took the rôle, and some just forgot to show up, but now that everyone is comfortably settled after the "now you see it now you don't" Easter vacation, we'd like to give special recognition to the prof who said nonchalantly, "I'm not going to be here Thursday and Friday. You can act accordingly."

Door to Door Service . . .

When a suit failed to be the correct size for one of his customers recently, a local retailer didn't let College dorm rules keep him from satisfying both the old and a new customer. Seems a Watts dweller notified the proprietor about the wrong size and a little while later he found a customer the suit would fit. An order was placed for the correct size for customer number one and customer number two immediately received the suit she desired. Almost immediately, that is, since it took only a few minutes for the genial merchandiser to run up to Watts, locate the girl's room, find the suit and then, quick as a flash, hurry home with it.

The Pity of It All . . .

In a recent interview Odette Hector, Costa Rican transfer, explaining a few of the customs of her land, said, "In Costa Rica we must take a chaperone with us on every date until we are engaged. It is very silly. At first the American soldiers stationed on the island could not understand this custom, but now they take the chaperone and like it." Well, they take the chaperone, anyway.

Sleep, It's Wonderful . . .

At Princeton the V-12ers' pet instructors have developed new tactics for the case of the sleeping student. According to a letter Player Claire Kohn received recently we learn about the boy who fell asleep in calculus class. Instead of issuing forth with the customary polite shove or gentle shout, the prof motioned his class to silence and after the hour everybody tiptoed out. Last report: still sleeping!

To Censor or . . .

Letters from last semester's grads are dribbling little by little now and we quote from one ex-Stater who, in fond reminiscing, writes back of an instructor, "Give him my compliments and ask him to consider making a record of one of his lectures and try listening himself." And that should squelch the rumor that all the bitter people are confined to the campus.

What Do You Say? . . .

In closing may we add, "PLEASE help keep your campus beautiful. Thanks." A characteristic trait of College—even the signs are polite.

Game Room Opens

After a long but fruitful struggle IWA and IMA are pleased to announce the opening of 401 Old Main, replete with ping-pong tables, card tables, a victrola and magazines, to all college students.

The room will be open to everyone from 7:30 a.m. to 11 p.m. every day, Dean Ray announced. IWA and IMA's only request is that the student body cooperate in the use and care of all equipment.

Innumerable former students received their wings this month. Included among these are Second Lieutenant John Holland, Bob Hazel, Gayle Gearhart, Jim McCaughan, George Williams, Don Hallman, Don Sandercock, Dave Mather, John McCauley, and Flight Officer Bob Nelson.

The fighter pilots received their wings at Eagle Pass, at Aloe and Fooster Fields in Victoria, and at Moore Field in Mission, all Texas flying schools. Bomber pilots included in the list of names were graduated at Frederick and Altus in Oklahoma and at the Texas air fields of Blackland at Waco, Ellington Field at Houston, Brooks Field at San Antonio, and the army flying schools at Lubbock and Pampa.

Two graduates were recently awarded the silver wings of the aerial navigator after completing the 18 weeks' course in advanced aerial navigation at San Marcos Army Air Field, Texas. They are Second Lieutenants Jay McGrew and Frank Stoe, both of whom were student officers.

Commissions in the air corps were recently received by Ray McKinley, Philip Walter, Les Thurston, Nicholas Vozzy, Milton Green, Bob Starr, Lee Wertz, Alfred Eberhardt, Alfred Johnson, James Graham, Ed Staricka.

Pob Farnsworth won his Navy "Wings of Gold" and was commissioned an Ensign in the Naval Reserve following the completion of the prescribed flight training at the Naval Air Training Center, Pensacola, Fla.

Karl Yohn recently won his silver wings as a pilot and was promoted to the rank of flight officer in the army Air Forces at Turner Field, Albany, Ga. We hear that Second Lt. Donald Beyer is now assistant Maintenance Offi-

Freshman Meeting

There will be a compulsory freshman mass meeting in Schwab Auditorium at 7 p.m. Monday, announced Pete Johnson, second semester president. It is designed to create class spirit and to get the students acquainted with their fellow class members.

Judicial and Tribunal, cooperating with Cabinet in making this meeting compulsory, are prepared to punish those who fail to attend. It is suggested that students come early, armed with a pencil.

Any students of other semesters and faculty members who are interested in fostering the old-time spirit are invited to attend.
