Tribunal Puts Two Misdemeanors In Sandwich Boards

Two violators of freshmen customs appeared before Tribunal Wednesday night and gave their stories in defense of the charges brought against them.

Louis L. Cohn, an engineering student, became a bit arrogant. He didn't like Tribunal's accusations. He expressed his opinion about the whole affair quite haughtily. Then Tribunal became indignant just to fit in with the atmosphere, and asked the youth if he had any substantial statements to make in his defense.

The first semester freshman gave an impressive oration, but he couldn't convince Tribunal. He didn't button for upperclassmen and that's all there was to it. Cohn will wear the usual sandwich sign. He will also wear his shirt and trousers backwards. A crown bearing the title "King Frosh" will rest upon his head.

Before being dismissed, Cohn had something to say about the students who reported him. "Those boys weren't very nice to me," he complained.

The other freshman, Ernest Brown, decided to haze his own classmen and will also wear a sandwich sign.

Both sign bearers will begin their sentences this morning. Good conduct on their part will entitle them to one week of this punishment.

It was announced at the meeting that second semester freshmen are allowed to haze. This action was necessitated because of the low male enrollment.

George Strohm, Bob McCoy, William Whitacre and Charles Cole were exempt from customs.
