

Journalist Visits-

Predicting a bright postwar future for trade between the two continents, Levy said South Americans regard United States business men as capable and honest.

In addition to his newspaper affiliations, Levy is also representing the Chile-American Association, an organization interested in promoting good relations between the two continents, and the Union for Victory for the Help of the Democracies.

An accomplished linguist, Levy speaks Spanish, French, and German. He has recently decided to add English to his list of languages "so I can use it on the return visit which I'm already planning to make."

Interfraternity Ball Date Still Indefinite

The IFC dance committee has been unable to decide as yet on a suitable date for Interfraternity Ball, Chairman James Hugo, revealed at IFC meeting Monday night.

Because of conflicts with other groups who have reserved Recreation Hall on the proposed nights, the dance may be postponed until next semester. In the meantime the committee is attempting to procure a "big-name" band to play at the affair.

Professor Tells Story Of Wartime Washington

Coutu studied the migration of Southerners to Northern industrial centers over the past half-century. Three million persons, one-quarter the excess of births over deaths, flocked to Detroit, Chicago, and other northern metropolitan districts because there weren't enough factories in the South to hire the surplus supply of labor.

This flow of workers over the Mason-Dixon line influenced the standing of several states in past Presidential contests, according to Dr. Coutu. Pennsylvania alone has sheltered approximately 50,000 Southerners since 1900.

In 1938 Gene Talmadge, in order to stay seated in the governor's chair of Georgia for another term, claimed that the University of Georgia was enrolling Negroes and denounced the college.

Foreseeing that college associations would blacklist the University of Georgia, Dr. Coutu resigned from the faculty. The university was temporarily discredited, but the Right Honorable Mr. Talmadge was severely licked at the polls.

While at the University of Texas from 1941-43 Dr. Coutu started a book, on his theory of personality development, which he hopes to finish while at Penn State.

As soon as Dr. Coutu arrived at State this month, he unpacked his fishing rod and tackle, all set to indulge in his favorite pastime. He looked around campus for a trout-filled stream like the one on the campus at Texas, but found only firm land here.

During the last world war, the sociology professor served as a sergeant and fought in every American campaign. After the armistice he stayed on with the Army of Occupation at Coblenz on the Rhine.

Dr. Coutu is a member of Alpha Kappa Lambda, Alpha Kappa Delta, the American Sociological Society, the American Association for the Advancement of Science, and the Population Association of America.

Women Artists Furnish Library Exhibit Prints
