'Fishing Good' States Prof

"Fish fever" induced by premature spring weather has brought more sucker fishing this month than any March of recent years, according to Gordon L. Trembley, assistant professor of fish culture at the College.

Impatient trout fishermen, backed by ration-conscious wives, have turned to sucker fishing as an outlet for their pre-season enthusiasm, Trembley explained, adding that suckers are "good eating" until summer, when they become too soft.

Including continually increasing numbers of women anglers, pre-draft age boys, and "old timers," Pennsylvania's fishermen this season will approach pre-war years in numbers, Trembley believes. He also predicts tremendous expansion in the postwar era.

The Penn State expert expressed confidence that conditions will be favorable for successful trout fishing next month, contending that only a heavy snow followed by sudden melting will seriously interfere with early season catches. At the present time the streams are neither too high nor too muddy, he said.

Society Lists Prerequisites

More than 80 per cent of the College's students who are elected into Phi Beta Kappa, national scholastic honorary, are graduates of the School of Liberal Arts, according to statistics. No more than 10 per cent of any one graduating class may be elected into the honorary.

When judging a candidate eligible for admission into the society, members of the local chapter consider the student's character as well as his grades. The chief aim of Phi Beta Kappa is to foster and point a way toward the attainment of a liberal education.

To be an eligible Phi Beta Kappa candidate, a graduating senior must have resided at the College for at least two years and must have an All-College average of 2.5 or better. His studies while a student must have been liberal in character, and he must give evidence of a wide range of interest.

An education liberal in character means that at least 20 per cent of the student's credits were in art, bacteriology, botany, chemistry, drama, economics, English, entomology, French, geography, geology, German, Greek, history, Italian, Latin, mathematics, mineralogy, music, philosophy, physics, physical science, political science, psychology, sociology, social science, Spanish, speech, or zoology.

The local chapter maintains the right to judge whether or not certain a subject may be called liberal. They define that term as applying only to subjects taught from a point of view of knowledge and enjoyment rather than immediate application or vocation.
