

Don Rose Sees Fellowship An Essential For Peace

"Unless fellowship becomes a fundamental reality, rather than an abstraction, all the conferences and plans for peace are futile," stated Don Rose, columnist and editorial writer for the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin, when he discussed the "Bottom of the Dishpan," Monday night.

Mr. Rose pointed out that post-war prophets are fashioning a new world, complete with all the latest inventions, but lacking in a foundation. He believes that this base should be a feeling of fellowship between men. According to him, fellowship is one of the many things for which the war is being fought.

"With such an idea of fellowship in mind, even people who don't like each other can work together and overcome their selfish desires," continued the journalist. "Perhaps some day the spirit of fellowship may extend itself to encompass our enemies as well as our allies."

The lecturer stated that in time of war many people call the studies of the liberal arts subjects a waste of time. He believes that this is a false accusation, because according to him, it is in these common studies that the unity of man is based. In his opinion, mechanical inventions have the seeds of conflict.

Mr. Rose further stated that a liberal education is necessary to aid in the discovery of human individuality and character. He deems such an education important because he believes that no matter how complex the world may become, it will be the individuals' responsibility to rule it.

"Things which are the core of liberal arts are those which bind us together, make us have faith, and see us through the darkest hours," emphasized Mr. Rose. "People with a liberal education live sensibly and can be taught."

As an example of a liberal subject the journalist cited English literature. He pointed out that the great books are not written on such momentary subjects as war, but on the everlasting topics of the drama of human life. Tying in with this drama are the human interest stories of newspapers stated Mr. Rose.

Mr. Rose called the newspapers of today a sheet of catastrophes, sorrows, murders, and accidents. He said that these stories which receive large headlines on the front page are important, but that the real stories are those of human everyday experiences. The journalist expressed the hope that someday newspapers would realize this fact and would play down the accident stories and give human interest the space it deserves.

Shortages Hamper Campus Repairs

Working under acute materials and labor shortages, approximately 200 men of the grounds and buildings department have begun several projects this spring. First is demolition of the baseball grandstands, declared unsafe. WPB restrictions on required materials have necessitated razing in place of repair.

With relocation of the radio towers and stations in the lot behind the University Club, the erection of a permanent ordinance research laboratory for the United States Navy is in progress. The building, to include 30,000 square feet, will be complete and ready for occupation within 120 days.

Repair of several campus buildings infested with termites has been postponed for the duration because their reconstruction does not come under the WPB title of "essential." The buildings, however, have not and will not for some time reach a point of unsafety.

G. W. Ebert, superintendent of grounds and buildings, announces that the combined cost of repair, maintenance, custodial care, and supply for the student body is $400,000 or more per year. This year few improvements are being made, and little planting will be done until fall, the planting season for the locality.
