INS Correspondent Relates Overseas Experiences

"You don't have to be a flier to fly," said Dixie Tighe, veteran war correspondent for International News Service, in her address to Journalism students Monday. "Every man on the bomber session right on down to the man on KP in the spirit flies every mission."

Miss Tighe, the only woman correspondent ever attached to the American Air Force in Britain, went on to explain the unwritten code of silence and conduct. "When a mission is on, the whole mission is being flown. There is a sort of 'we don't talk about that' spirit, according to the correspondent."

"I have seen a whole squadron wiped out. No one showed up at mess. It seems more natural for an airman to go off by himself to suffer," continued the speaker. "When a mission is on, the whole base becomes a clock watcher, quiet and solemn."

In explaining her work, Miss Tighe said that voluntary censorship prevails on a bomber session, although there is a rule that a correspondent must not mention names of wounded or missing men until several days after the incident. Commenting upon a recent breach of newspaper ethics, Miss Tighe expressed her disapproval of evading censorship. "When you make a pact, you should keep it" is her policy.

"No one can make me believe that the German bombers were looking for targets any more than a hurricane looks for a single tree," asserted the journalist. "There is the instance of a single raider which dropped one bomb on a school and then descended to machine gun the fleeing children. That was no military target."

"In my estimation nurses are the greatest morale factors in the war. They are really doing a wonderful job. I was once surprised to find a German prisoner on a hospital evacuation plane and was informed that a man is moved by priority of his wound, not by nationality."

Mrs. Maxine Miller was elected president of Iota Sigma Pi, women's chemistry honorary, at a recent meeting. Other officers chosen were: Suzanne Davidson, vice-president; Mrs. Evelyn Marboe, recording secretary and treasurer; Nancy Hoeflich, corresponding secretary.

Juniors Meet, Lack Enthusiasm

A junior class meeting will be held in 121 Sparks, 8 p.m., Monday. At this meeting, picnic arrangements for fifth and sixth semester students will be made.

It will be the second meeting of the junior class this semester, the first meeting being held Wednesday. At that time Charlotte E. Ray, dean of women, and Arthur R. Warnock, dean of men, talked on the theme of traditional Penn State spirit.

Plans for the class picnic were discussed with relation to holding it at Whipples Dam, a Boy Scout Camp, or Fairmount Park.

Seventy-five out of 500 juniors appeared.

"The student body has long been in favor of more active class functions," stated Stanley Bernheim, sixth semester president. "Unless the students realize they must cooperate with their class and bear a part of the responsibilities, it is impossible to further advocate any programs."

"Participation in the manner of attendance is all that is specifically required. Group enthusiasm has unlimited possibilities, so with these facts in mind, when future meetings are called, let's do our utmost to attend," Bernheim said.

Dr. H. E. Robinson, assistant chief chemist for Swift and Company, will speak at the 130th meeting of the Central Pennsylvania Section of American Chemical Society. The meeting will be in 119 New Physics, 7:30 p. m. Monday.

Tanger Fears Russian Expansion in Pacific

United States and Great Britain may be compelled to yield a few points to Russia or face the prospect of losing her cooperation in a world peace organization, Dr. Jacob Tanger, State College political scientist, said today.

"Russia," explained Tanger, "is keenly aware of her potentialities as a great, strong nation. And, having been an outcast for so long, she is sensitive about her relations with capitalistic nations."

Dr. Tanger fears Russia has not yet expressed her complete desires insofar as her sphere of influence in the Balkans and the Baltic region is concerned. Moreover, if she enters the war against Japan, Dr. Tanger expects Russia to make additional demands for territorial rights in the Pacific.

"Barring a nation like Russia or Argentina from a world organization," Dr. Tanger added, "would give them reason to plan selfishly with no attempt at international cooperation."

The political scientist expressed little concern over the possibilities of military conflict with Russia, but believes that Russia will be a serious competitor for world markets within the next 10 years.

College Alumnus Receives Award

A College alumnus, Dr. Max A. Lauffer, received the 1945 $1,000 Eli Lilly and Company Award for outstanding research in biological chemistry, it was recently announced by the board of directors of the American Chemical Society.

Dr. Lauffer graduated from the College in 1933 and received his master's degree a year later. He earned his doctor's degree at the University of Minnesota. In 1937 Dr. Lauffer joined the research staff of the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research.

At present Dr. Lauffer is an associate to the University of Pittsburgh's dean of research in natural sciences, Dr. Herbert E. Longenecker, also an alumnus of the College.

Judging by some of the clothing prices folks pay, all the dummies aren't inside the show windows.
