

Naval ROTC

Integration be achieved between NROTC trainees and other groups on campus, and maximum interest be given to the individual trainee. Three types of students, he said, must get attention—those who are members of the V-12 unit now, those who will join the NROTC unit in November, and those who will join after the end of the war.

All members, chosen from the fleet, will remain in college for a total of eight semesters. Present V-12ers have already begun basic ROTC courses, and will be required to complete 33 credits of naval science and tactics to be counted toward their degrees, before they are graduated, in order to receive naval commissions.

Students who become members of the program on November 1 will begin with the present V-12 curriculum rather than the new program. Postwar students will throughout their college careers, take courses in seamanship, ordnance, fire control, naval engineering, navigation, and naval science.

A minimum number of courses in naval science and tactics will be offered during the student's freshman and sophomore years, in order that a broad academic foundation may be acquired. All courses will terminate at the end of one semester.

In addition to naval science and tactics courses, members of the NROTC will be required to know physics and mathematics through trigonometry, and to be competent in written and oral English and a modern foreign language, to be demonstrated by an examination.

A fifth course required for officer candidates will be foundations of national power, which will be given with the intent of stimulating the student's thinking in national and international dealings. It will be given in the junior or senior year.

Captain Adams explained that it will be a matter for Congress to determine support for the postwar NROTC student. The cardinal principle of the program, he said, will be to achieve maximum integration of the NROTC unit with the College. He feels confident that members will not be in uniform 24 hours a day, nor be housed and fed separately, thereby eliminating segregation of the unit.

Dean Foresees Shortage Of Engineers, Architects

The nation's supply of engineers, architects, and scientists will be "critically short" until at least 1950, according to Dr. H. P. Hammond, dean of the School of Engineering at the College.

Basing his predictions on the decreased number of college graduates during the wartime period, Dean Hammond said the nation will be short more than 75,000 trained engineers and scientists.

Dean Hammond, who has been awarded this year's Lamme Medal, the nation's top honor in the field of engineering education, pointed out the shortage is occurring "at the time of greatest need."

"Not only does the United States face the gigantic task of reconverting to a peacetime economy," he explained, "but the whole world is looking to us for leadership in repairing the catastrophic results of the war."

Deficit Of $351.40 On IF Ball, Says Hein

An estimated deficit of $351.40 resulted from the June 8 Interfraternity Ball, Harold Hein, chairman, announced today.

However, realizing the possibility of a loss, each fraternity donated $50 to a sinking fund for the dance. Of this total, approximately $15 of the amount each group contributed will cover the deficit.

Major expenses for the dance were: orchestra (Vincent Lopez), $1500; decorations, $150; programs $116.05; tax on admissions, $342.60; college labor, $100.

A total of 551 admissions were sold, netting $1,653. Twenty-four booths were sold, totaling $120.

A total of 1523 dispensary calls were made during the month of June with 159 ASTP students, 108 V-12 students, and 1256 regular college students being attended.

of the Veterans Administration. As training officer, he will work in conjunction with Mr. Galbraith in settling the claims of veterans, and act as a liaison official between Penn State and Pittsburgh.

Co-directed by Dr. Kinsley R. Smith and Dr. Bruce V. Moore, the Vocational Appraisal Clinic is under contract with the Veterans Administration to give vocational appraisal and counseling to veterans under rehabilitation.

In carrying out this program, each veteran is given private interviews and tests covering mechanical, mental, and special aptitudes. A survey of his personality and vocational potentialities is thereby made. The Clinic gives this service to all cases authorized by the Veterans Administration.

At present, about 15 cases a week are being handled by the Clinic, and this rate will be stepped up. Assisting Dr. Smith and Dr. Moore are Mr. Henry Borrow and Mrs. Miriam Woods, counselors, and Mrs. Betty B. Musser, secretary.

Former Student Arrests Criminal Wanted In U. S.

Orange C. Dickey, Wellesley Hills, Massachusetts, former student at the College, has made a name for himself in the Mediterranean Theater of Operations as an agent for the Criminal Investigation Division. While working on a major case, he recently apprehended a former member of the "Lucky Luciano" gang who is wanted in the United States on three homicide charges. This notorious criminal will be sent back to the States for trial.

The CID's job is to investigate criminal acts committed by members of the American Army, and by others to the injury of the American soldier and the American government. Since the beginning of its operations overseas, the CID has recovered millions of dollars worth of U. S. Government property, restricted black market activity, and investigated major crimes.

Overseas 32 months, Agent Dickey wears the Mediterranean Theater Ribbon with one Battle Participation Star, the Good Conduct Medal and the Unit Meritorious Service insignia.
