

Whitaker Fills Vacant Post

A committee of three, headed by Professor Eliot L. Whitaker, will administer the affairs of the architecture department pending selection of a new head, College officials announced today. Professor Kenneth Johnstone, present head, assumed his new position at Carnegie Tech Thursday.

Assisting Professor Whitaker on the committee will be Professor J. Burn Helme and Professor Louis A. Richardson. The membership of the committee was recommended to President Hetzel by Dean Harry P. Hammond of the School of Engineering.

A leave of absence has also been granted Dr. Clarence O. Williams, in charge of teacher placement in the School of Education, to do special research work at the University of Miami. Joseph K. Thornton, associate professor of farm crops, also has been granted a leave from October 20 to December 20 to study at the University of Wisconsin.

Two promotions advance Maude M. Drumm from assistant extension representative to extension representative in home economics extension, and establish Mrs. Margaret Spanger as assistant librarian, in charge of reader service.

The following have resigned: Raymond E. Murphy, professor of geography, to accept a position at the University of Hawaii; Robert R. Professor Broyles Retires From Ag Ed Department

William Anderson Broyles has retired as professor emeritus of agricultural education at the College, but his teachings still resound in classrooms all over Pennsylvania.

During the quarter century he has been at the College, Dr. Broyles has had in class practically every agriculture instructor in Pennsylvania's 305 vocational schools of agriculture.

Dr. Broyles' teaching career began at the age of 19, before he even completed college preparatory work, when he got a job teaching "everything" in the rural schools of Delaware County, Indiana. That was in 1899.

Between then and 1920, when he became a professor of agricultural education at the College, Dr. Broyles taught at several schools in Indiana, North Dakota and Texas.

Probably his best-known pupil was Wendell Wilkie, who learned botany and zoology from Professor Broyles in Elwood High School, Indiana.

"As a matter of fact," Professor Broyles says, "he lived across the street from us and we knew the whole family. It's a good example of how you never know

Hitler's Car Appears On College Avenue

The crowds milling about Co-Op Corner Sunday noon were trying to catch a glimpse of Adolph Hitler's favorite automobile, not waiting for a booth in the Corner Room. The car, a Mercedes-Benz convertible model, was captured by the 101st Airborne Division near Berchtesgaden and was accompanied here by four of the Division's personnel. The automobile was brought here in connection with the Victory Bond drive.

The royal blue car was lavishly splashed with chrome and built extremely low. One of its unique features was the inch-thick windshield. From the mobs jammed about it, one would have thought Hitler himself was driving the car.

where political greatness is going to spring from."

Dr. Broyles will be remembered, however, as more than the teacher of someone else. He is the inventor of the National Computing Fan . . . a device, shaped like a fan and based on a little known mathematical formula, which is used to compute scores of contestants in judging contests.

Professor Broyles earned a bachelor of science degree from Tri-State College 1905; a bachelor of arts degree from Indiana University, 1908; a master of arts degree from the University of Wisconsin, 1914; and a doctorate from the University of Illinois in 1925. He is a member of Phi Delta Kappa, Gamma Sigma Delta, American Association of University Professors, the American Vocational Association, and the Masons.

Dr. and Mrs. Broyles will continue to live in State College, although Dr. Broyles plans to visit colleges through the south this winter demonstrating methods of teaching.
