Players Review—

the living room of Ruth and Charles Condorine's house in Kent, England. In order to get material for a new novel Charles, played by Joseph Vispi, invites Madam Arcati, a mystic medium, to hold a seance. The upshot of the session is to materialize Elvira, Charles' first wife; visible only to the audience and Charles. The play moves wittily along for two more acts during which Ruth, after considerable misunderstanding and torment is killed. Madam Arcati then is called in to dematerialize the two unwanted spirits.

Elvira, the first wife and "Elithe Spirit", played by Dee James, and Joseph Vispi as Charles never were out of character throughout the full three acts, and certainly deserve continuing a phrase and even his of acting. Vispi's intonation when gratulations for an excellent job manner of sitting in a chair all contributed to a realistic characterization of an inbred, over-sophisticated, upper class Englishman. The irresponsible chatter and continual flitting of Dee James as Elvira, changed what could have been ridiculous and boring, into a most entertaining evening. We enjoyed her every minute.

Sevast Plays Comedienne Verna Sevast, as Madam Arcati, "spiked the drink" for us whenever she appeared. Her carefully enunciated words, her red underdrawers, and above all her way of waving the world away with a great sweeping arc

Belles Lettres To Elect At Organization Meeting

An organization meeting of the Belles Lettres Club, open to all English Literature majors in Liberal Arts, will be held in 204 Sparks at 4 p. m. Thursday.

Varied Lectures, demonstrations and panel discussions make up the programs for the bi-monthly meetings. The object of Belles Lettres are to build comradeship among those majoring in literature, to aid them in meeting the faculty on an equal footing, and to provide mutual help and instruction.

One of the purposes of the meeting is to elect a secretary and treasurer. Douglas S. Mead, professor of English Literature, and A. Pauline Locklin, associate professor of English Literature, are faculty sponsors of the club.
