 The first plane to come in. The next two Zeros were shot up pretty badly."

The fighters got out of the way then, and the flak began. The B-24's released their bombs, went into a shallow dive for speed, climbed. They formed a box formation to make their gunners' fire power as effective as possible. As soon as the bombers were out of flak range, the Zeros came in again, this time from both sides. For 40 minutes the fighters dove at the four American ships.
 "We flew the tightest formation I ever saw," Bob said.
 The crews could see it growing dark below them and knew daylight would still linger high over enemy territory where the bombers were struggling home. The Zeros dove, leveled off, dove again.

It began to grow dark at last. Five Zeros had been shot down the fighters withdrew 40 minutes after they had appeared. Number four plane in the bomber formation had lost one of its engines, but no one was hurt. All four B-24's were still flying!

Robert Martin received his discharge last October with the ATO ribbon, the Air Medal with an Oak Leaf Cluster, the Distinguished Flying Cross, the Purple Heart to his credit. He had flown 58 bombing missions with Chennault's 14th Air Group.

Bob, whose home is in Pittsburgh, moved to State College this November with his wife to study aeronautical engineering.

There are now, and there was no crisis to speak of, bearing out that some of them could not possibly have lived in the haunts of men. Again in those days, the average was five males for every female in college—a boast made much of in bulletins and catalogues to prospective girl students—and every girl was given, or if she had individuality, compiled a list of her five men who after being haughtily interviewed at night in Ath Hall lounges were juggled around in order of preference. Now we learn the situation is about even. There is a male, or reasonable facsimile thereof, for every female extant and life must be simply dull. The knife mart must be bankrupt.

We await with impetuosity the decline of learning the skeptics predict and the loosening of morals that "is bound to come" a la the roaring twenties. 'Twill be more than interesting to see State College one mad beehive of gin-mills, roadsters, loose women, debauched men and sensitive literary types—'twill be impossible, praise be to Zeus . . . We definitely do not want to keep making fignal appearances like Bernhard, so if you ever see our name in this space again, it's a plagiarism.

Letter To Editor

Dear Madam:

In your last issue a certain "fortunate freshman" blew his top about the NROTC and the present College admission plan. Perhaps the fellow didn't know all the facts. Perhaps he just overlooked them. But read further.

Once in the Navy, old fortunate frosh, you go where you're ordered to go. The Navy has us here because it considers it to its advantage to have us in school. Up until two months ago we couldn't have transferred out even at our own request.

Stationed here right now are several men with more overseas time than you, my bitter friend. One man in particular has spent more time aboard ship than you have in your whole naval career. Of course, this means nothing to you. Then, there are men with ribbons, with purple hearts, with as many sea stories as you can tell.

The men here have served their country — and some will continue to do so long after you are graduated. Perhaps you're bitter more from the fact that you yourself lost college time because of the war than from any considerations about veterans who never before attended college and can't get in now.

Finally, laddie boy, please don't bring your brother and your family troubles to the Collegian; see the chaplain instead.

Viciously yours,
 Truculent Trainee

DEAR EDITOR:

For many years it has been a tradition for Penn State students to socialize over a "coke" at the Corner Room. The reason that we have chosen the Corner Room is for its convenient location and particularly for its friendly atmosphere UP 'TIL NOW.

Suddenly, probably as the result of a New Year's resolution on the part of some money-hungry individual, the Corner Room has taken on a most disagreeable and independent attitude.

Students are severely rebuked by waitresses at the instructions of the management, for not ordering profusely and continuously. There have even been instances of students being asked to leave because everyone in the group has not ordered.

Lately a new scheme has been devised in order to further intimidate students. Each time an order is taken the exact minute is stamped on the back of the check so that no one will merely sit and kill time. Soon the menu will probably contain not only the prices but the amount of time you can stay with each order. For example, a cup of coffee will allow you exactly ten minutes in this exclusive beanery.

The Corner Room depends upon the patronage of the students for almost their entire business and reputation. If the students should decide to vacate the place for a more hospitable meeting and eating place the Corner Room (and the cash register) would begin to resemble a vacuum.

Why don't Penn State students do something about this disgraceful condition? A boycott by all students would certainly bring these grasping individuals back into line. Only by this action will we be able to have the Corner Room as it once was—a pleasant, friendly gathering place where students are treated decently.

Disgustedly,
 Two former Corner Roomers

Dear Editor:

There is a great deal of interest on campus in flooding the tennis courts for ice skating. At the cost of a few thousand dollars a skating rink could be constructed which would be far more satisfactory to everyone. The little pond east of State College is inconvenient to anyone without an auto; yet it is always crowded on weekends when there is ice.

If a skating surface could be provided closer to the campus it could be utilized in sandwich hours. It would also become practical to provide instruction in figure skating for those who are interested. And it would facilitate the return of ice hockey to State.
