Visiting Newshawks Take Quick Survey Of Campus Paper

The Saturday afternoon wind whistled around the corners of Carnegie Hall. No sound could be heard coming from the news room, except the humdrum routine of a reporter's interview. Then an unmusical door opened and three men stalked into the room. They stood there, silhouetted against the doorway and asked for "someone from Collegian."

The reporter was only a lowly reporter, she explained, but could she help, huh? It was too bad. Three members of the staff of the Pitt News in Pittsburgh dropped in at the Collegian and only a reporter was there to greet them. But in spite of this, it must be noted that Jack Bloom, business manager, Larry Bondy, sports editor, and Lowell Lubis, sports reporter, were favorably impressed with the professional appearance of the news room.

"Gee, we have only four typewriters!" the sports reporter gaped as he gazed fondly at the dozen and a half typewriters which sat placidly on the tables next to the walls. Apparently he didn't catch the murderous glint in the eyes of his superiors.

"That horseshoe table is really something!" he continued. "And you should see how small our offices are compared to yours."

Duty in Trinidad

In June, 1943, Colonel Haller was assigned to temporary duty in Trinidad, in connection with anti-submarine activities involving the detection of enemy submarines by means of airborne magnetic detectors on which his laboratory had worked.

He was promoted to Lieutenant Colonel in July, 1943, and assigned to temporary duty with the Northwest African Air Forces for counter-measures planning and operation during the invasion of Sicily. He personally led the radar counter-measures group consisting of three special investigational aircraft and 16 bombers containing the first installation of electronic jamming devices to be used in an operational theatre.

He later was assigned to Advanced Headquarters, Northwest African Air Forces, for planning and executing the American attempt at jamming the enemy Würzburg radar systems. This operation, from the investigation and analysis to the actual jamming, was accomplished by means of equipment developed by his laboratory.

Subsequent Prisoner of War interrogation, combined with the low losses of our aircraft and naval units, gave evidence that radar counter-measures had played an important part in the success of the invasion and subsequently all squadrons of the United States Strategic Air Forces in Europe were equipped. Official analysis indicated that radar counter-measures equipped aircraft has flak losses cut by approximately 50 per cent.

Heads Radio, Radar Program

In 1944 Colonel Haller's laboratory was greatly expanded when the entire Army Air Forces program for radio and radar control of guided missiles was placed under his direction.

Key Elects Pfleegor New Clique Chairman

Members of the Key Party elected Charles Pfleegor the new Clique chairman at a meeting in Old Main on Sunday evening. Pfleegor succeeds William Morton who has held the post for the past year.

At the same time, Key members elected Barbara McCleary to the position of party secretary. She succeeds June First who was elected to office along with Morton.

Some 150 students took part in the election which was preceded by an open discussion of whether or not Key should merge with another party. It was decided by an overwhelming vote that Key would retain its present name and not merge with another party, but that the party would undergo a new organization of publicity and campaign staffs including sub-clique chairmen for each semester.
