

Anderson Says Poles Abused

Russian forces in Europe would do well to observe the American Army of Occupation in operation.

So says Dr. C. S. Anderson, professor of agricultural education at the College who, as requirements and supply specialist for the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration, spent six months in post-war Poland.

"Russian forces antagonize the people with curfews and a lot of asinine regulations, many of them petty," he reported. "Some people in Poland now feel life under the Nazi regime was better."

Dr. Anderson also said there was widespread looting and plundering by Russian troops in Poland.

Russian soldiers drive herd after herd of cattle to the Soviet border, according to Dr. Anderson, claiming they come from Germany. But the Poles insist "they are ours."

Sewing machines and all kinds of electrical equipment, such as refrigerators, irons, and toasters, were popular among the Soviet looters, he added.

Farm machinery, horses, wrist watches, beds, mattresses and pieces of furniture were taken and shipped to Russia, too, as "German loot," the Penn State educator found.

Many Warsaw shops are boarded shut at night, much as are the windows in Times Square for New Year's Eve celebrations, Dr. Anderson pointed out.

He recalled how he left his watch with a Polish jeweler to have a crystal replaced. The jeweler refused to keep the watch overnight, warning that it may not be there the next day if he left it in his shop.

"What can we do?" asked one shopkeeper. "They are our liberators."

The present government in Poland is composed largely of Russian officials since the Soviets, like the Nazis, were unable to find "Quislings" among the Poles, according to Dr. Anderson.

"The Poles are the most nationalistic people I met in all Europe," he added. "They'd rather die than be 'Quislings.'"

Many Poles regard the present government as a temporary one and it's not uncommon, Dr. Anderson says, to have them whisper: "When are you Americans really going to liberate us?"

Kodak Fellowship Given To Graduate Student

Charles L. P. Vaughn, graduate student and fellow in chemistry at the College, has been awarded the Eastman Kodak Fellowship for research in organic chemistry for 1946, Dean F. C. Whitmore, of the School of Chemistry and Physics, announced today.

Vaughn came to Penn State in 1943 and has been engaged in war research on aviation fuel for the American Petroleum Institute and the National Bureau of Standards. He received his master of science degree in 1944 and presently is engaged in isomerization and rearrangement studies of hydrocarbons used in aviation fuel.

New Portfolio On Sale By Subscription Only

February's issue of "The New Portfolio" is now on sale by subscription as no single copies will be sold. This month's edition contains "The Fate of Gaspar Chauncey," a satire about the College Infirmary. Also included is a short story by David Cummings titled "I Know You" and "Dreamin's Fun" by Ina Rosen.

A story of a returning veteran by Kenneth Edgar is "You're Changed," and "Beta Boys In Action" by Barney Hodell is another satire of interest concerning the fire department. Subscriptions may be obtained at Student Union and from staff members.

Lost: Persons Hunting For $30,000 Wallet

The old linotype must have stuttered when the classified ad which should have announced the loss of a wallet containing $30,000 announced instead that $30,000 had been lost. It is reported that several students thought seriously of leaving College to search for the money and at least one prominent gentleman on campus was considering retiring from his position.

It all began when Sponseller, who was enrolled for a short course in dairy husbandry, lost his wallet and decided to advertise in the Centre Daily Times. As yet, John has not received word from the finder.
