Trying To Escape Just Doesn't Work; Moral: Keep Dates

The wind was sweeping black clouds across the narrowing expanse of sky, as a dim figure slipped from the side door of a building. It was clad in a long black coat, several sizes too large, and had a black covering over its head.

The dark shape made its way down the path to the Mall, casting furtive glances behind and to the side. Moving rapidly along toward the Corner, it coughed violently and covered its face with a glove as anyone passed by. Reaching the street, it made a quick dash for a building three or four doors up.

The lights of the street revealed that it was a girl, clad in slacks and wearing huge green-framed glasses, her face colorless and lacking lipstick. After making a quick transaction at the ticket window, she disappeared within the building. She groped up the balcony steps, managed to find a seat, and slumped down in it with a profound sigh of relief.

She became deeply engrossed in the action before her. Hours went by, and before she realized what was happening the room lit up and a can was being passed around for the "March of Dimes." She clutched at her chair, and stared wildly about her. The three rows in front of her were filled with brothers of a well-known local fraternity. At the same moment, one of them turned around and looked at her with a penetrating stare.

"Jean!" he cried impulsively. Then after a second glance, "Oh, pardon me, you look so much like a girl my roommate dates."

"Of course," she murmured in a muffled voice, sinking deeper into her seat.

He looked at her with a puzzled expression, but the theater darkened again. She lunged from her seat and forced her way through the crowd out onto the street. Crossing the street, she hurried back up the Mall and into the side door of her dorm.

Once safely in her room, she threw off the green glasses, returned the large coat to her roommate's closet. She threw herself down upon her bed and contemplated the evening. "Leave Her to Heaven" was worth it, but it was just her luck to sit behind his whole fraternity. Yes, breaking a date in State College was a complicated business, requiring a mastery of disguise.

What Does Your Father Do To Earn His Daily Bread?

By Suzanne McCauley

Statistics are dull. Remember the lines on that barrage of registration cards you filled in last week that were marked "father's occupation?" It took a College statistician a bit of figuring to do it, but she finally computed that 48 fathers last semester had no occupations. The occupations that call most papas off to work each day are the foreman - superintendent - manager group with 444, and merchant-store per group with 443.

If it's a justice of the peace you're aseekin' you'll have to look hard for only two parents hang out that single. Who says the horse-and-buggy days are gone forever? With two blacksmiths in business it sounds as if the old gray mare is coming into its own again.

President Truman might be flummoxed to know that only one miller appeared on the list.

It's a touchy subject but there are 156 teachers and professors among Penn State parents. Other figures include 115 miners, 5 musicians, and 58 doctors. All the yanks aren't in the army either since we note that 49 parents are dentists. With such abuse of a lower form of humor we'll advise you to know your roommate's parents better because they may be one of the many sources of butter (better known as grocers and meat dealers).

Said statisticians missed nothing on those registration cards and soon found herself involved in a little geography amounting to "how many from where." She found that Allegheny, Philadelphia, and Centre counties lead the enrollment with 443, 374, and 285 respectively. Of the 34 states mentioned besides Pennsylvania, New York ranked first with 237, New Jersey second with 189, and Massachusetts third with 4. South America contributed 13, and the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, and the Canal Zone are also represented.

How old is a college student? The ages of Penn State women range all the way from 17 to 48 years, which they vary according to their escort. The youngest co-ed was born in 1930, while 4 were born in 1929, 586 in 1927, 625 in 1926, and 475 in 1925. The four youngest men were born in 1929. Other age concentration for men are 315 in 1924, 403 in 1926, and 452 in 1927.
