Gene Floyd Recalls Atomic Bomb Survey

Atomic bomb surveys, ancient tribes of tattooed women, Holstein cattle on a northern Japanese island are among and Holstein cattle on a northern Japanese island are among the memories of Gene Floyd, new director of men's activities for the Penn State Christian Association.

Mr. Floyd, who has recently been discharged from the Navy after duty as a communications officeer with Admiral Nimitz, served on the U.S. S. Haines with the Strategic Bomb Survey Group and toured Japan, noting the damages inflicted by the Navy.

It was while he travelled in this group that Mr. Floyd visited Hiroshima and viewed the results of the first atomic bomb. Fantastic empty buildings loomed ominously from the otherwise barren and desolate ground. Closer inspection showed these structures to be hollow shells containing absolutely nothing. It seemed to Mr. Floyd that every piece of furniture had mysteriously disintegrated to a fine dust.

Eerie creatures wandered aimlessly through the wilderness that geous Japanese, smeared with a white salve to cover their burns, sought futiley to find a trace of their homes. Radioactive rays had disappeared and these were the first of the fortunate survivors to enter the place that was Hiro-

Japanese Not Antagonistic

Destruction reigned over all the important Japanese cities, for each had received its share of the Navy's shelling and Army's bombing, as Mr. Floyd discovered on his trip. Curious Japanese watched the new invaders as this group was often the first to enter a town. The people were at times indifferent or morbidly curious, but never openly antagonistic. They had been told they were at peace, and they obeyed their Emperor.

Women with tattooed mustaches were among the members of an ancient tribe of Ainus that Mr. Floyd visited on a side trip. He talked, through an interpreter, to the 62-year-old chief of the 16,-000 natives, who is now running for Japanese parliament and with his tribe's support, will probably be successful. This ancient tribe of Hokkaido island still uses poisoned arrows and clubs and are thick chested and bearded. Holstein Cattle on Hokkaido Holstein cattle were another interest of Hokkaido and a puzzle too. By doing a little private re-search, Mr. Floyd discovered that an American interested in agriculture had taken them to this cold, barren island and developed them there.

Before entering the service, Mr. Floyd attended Hamlin College at St. Paul, Minn.; Washburn University at Topeka, Kan.; and Boston University for theological work. He also directed the YMCA at the University of Nebraska, while his wife was interested in music there.

The new director of men's activities for the Christian Associa-tion hopes to surpass the pre-war work with the aid of the returned servicemen and with them Mr. Floyd intends to start bigger and better plans.

From 150 to 200 inmates attended the three previous services which the P. S. B. F. held at the Penitentiary. These meetings were conducted by members of the P. S. B. F., who led singing, prayer, and gave a message from Scripture. At two of the services some of the inmates took part in the musical portion of the meeting by presenting a trombone solo one Sunday, and selections by a vocal quartet another.
