

Bates, Floyd To Address Atomic Energy Council

Dr. Thomas F. Bates, of the department of mineralogy and Eugene H. Floyd, associate secretary of the Penn State Christian Association, will speak at an open meeting of the State College Citizen's Council for the Control of Atomic Energy, to be held at 8 p.m. Tuesday in 110 Electrical Engineering.

Dr. Bates will discuss "Uranium Deposits and Power Politics," while Floyd will speak on "I Saw Hiroshima."

The local community council, which is not affiliated with any national organization, was established to promote the education of the community on the problems of atomic energy control. The council also hopes to exert pressure for legislative action to support civilian control of atomic energy as originally stated in the Douglas-McMahon Bill without amendments.

Dr. R. W. Brewster, associate professor of political science, is chairman of the council while Dean Edward Steidle, of the School of Mineral Industries, is honorary chairman.

'Campus Close-Ups' Signs Off Until Fall

Collegian's "Campus Close-ups" program, which has been aired every Thursday evening over WMAJ, will not be heard again until the Fall semester. At that time, the program will again be written, directed, and produced by members of the Daily Collegian staff.

With the cooperation of WMAJ and the program's sponsors, the Corner Room, "Campus Close-Ups" will present the latest in campus news, along with interviews with active organizations on the campus.

George Washington was denied the only personal request he ever made of Congress—his written commission as commander-in-chief which he wanted to keep as a memento.

College Initiates Apiary Course

Registrations are now being filed for the first short course in beekeeping ever offered at the College. A Leland Beam, director of short courses in agriculture announced today. The instruction, designed primarily for the 30,000 individuals keeping bees in Pennsylvania, is scheduled for August 19 to 24, inclusive.

Edwin J. Anderson, professor of apiculture in charge of apiary research, will be in charge of the course. Instruction will include seasonal management of hives throughout the year, extracting and bottling of honey methods, queen rearing, marketing methods and problems, disease control and use of package bees. Most of the course will be conducted in the college apiaries and laboratory, Professor Anderson said.

For the final day of the course, arrangements have been made to have George Rea, of Reynoldsville, lecturer for the National Federation of Beekeepers Associations, address those taking the short course. Rea is former extension apiary specialist of Pennsylvania, New York, Tennessee and North Carolina, and served in various capacities for beekeeping interests prior to his retirement a year ago.
