

Spilt Milk

Action on the part of the College Creamery to withdraw its milk from the local market (downtown grocery stores, boarding houses and fraternities) will not effect as much hardship as might be expected.

Dean Lyman Jackson, School of Agriculture, has said that the Creamery will retire from the local market "in a gradual and orderly manner that will insure adequate milk supply for the community."

Creamery prices were the same as those charged by the local milk dealers (who forced them out of the downtown market) so fraternities will not be paying more for their milk.

The Creamery will continue to process its present volume of milk but it will be used to meet "on campus" demands brought on by increased numbers of residents living in Windcrest, the trailer community, and the Pollock Circle dormitories.

A point to remember, however, is that fraternity people are entitled to as much consideration (in view of the fact that the College never built enough dormitories to house all students on campus) as those living in College operated dorms.

They need balanced diets also. If local milk dealers cannot meet the demand then something should be done.

And it wouldn't be a bad idea for the College to retrench and prepare defenses for the next battle in this trouble with local milk dealers. Having chased the Creamery out of town their next step will be to insist that they have the right to supply College dormitories with milk. Maybe a fine thing for those who cry for freedom for private enterprise but a wasteful thing for all practical purposes, for the milk must be processed as part of the research work in dairy products and it shouldn't be allowed to go to waste.

Cool Off Here

TO THE EDITOR: Many thanks for the correct and concise statement concerning Chapel Choir tryouts.

It is by far the most satisfactory handling of our announcement that I have seen.

Yours sincerely,

College Health Service

ROBERT WILLS, fourth semester, was admitted to the College Infirmary yesterday afternoon.

The best way to get into your stride is to budget your time. You need time for work, rest and relaxation but not equal amounts of each. If relaxation and extra-curricular activities take up too much of your time now, you pay later in the term with low academic grades.

DR. HERBERT GLENN, Director

Thirty

It is with the deepest regret that we announce in this issue the passing of one of our staff members, sports editor, Leo Kornfeld.

During his six semesters at Penn State he has taken an active part in various campus activities. After viewing the effort and enthusiasm he poured into this paper during the past few semesters, we don't find it difficult to concede that Collegian was at the top of this list.

Like many of us he waited for day when we would once again assume the title of Daily Collegian and publish the paper on a pre-war status. Ironically enough he fulfilled that desire, for despite a summer long illness, he returned to the campus early last week and together with a skeleton staff put out the first edition on Friday in time for registration.

We, his fellow staff members, will perhaps remember his many fine qualities more vividly than those students who didn't know him so well. We'll miss his presence as well as the fine journalistic work he did for this newspaper.

Egypt Report

NOTE—From time to time, THE DAILY COLLEGIAN will bring you on-the-spot reports direct from the various troubled areas throughout the world. We should like to emphasize that these reports are being sent to us by friends of our staff members and not by trained observers. Therefore, we shall always give a brief background of each correspondent.

Today's account is from a 22-year-old Egyptian-born Jewess named Judy Polne. A life-long resident of Alexandria, Egypt, Miss Polne recently returned from a trip to Palestine.

Here in Egypt, the Palestinian question is the one which monopolises headlines in almost all local newspapers. The whole thing might be said to be a muddle. But about my opinions since returning from Palestine:

British policy in Palestine at present seems to be most undecided. The behavior of the soldiers destroying Jewish confidence in the British government.

In one village, a settler complained to an officer that a soldier had tried to rob him of his watch while he was asleep. The officer's reply was, "It may be true that my men take watches, but they don't kill people who are asleep."

Another example—Two officers who said they were members of the British Labour Party were asked by a settler why the soldiers acted as they did toward Socialist communal settlements. They replied, "BECAUSE YOU ARE ALL FASCISTS." On the other hand, a third officer who joined the group answered, "BECAUSE YOU ARE ALL COMMUNISTS AND ARE HELPING THE BOLSHEVIKS."

As refugees keep arriving and immediately are deported to Cyprus, Jewish patience is getting exhausted. The curfew disorganizes business and communal life. Most of the male members from settlements get arrested and are taken away without question. Refugees are desperate in their desire to get into Palestine.

Now for the Egyptian problem: Outwardly, the country appears to be calm, but there is an uncertainty in the atmosphere. There are quite a number of Egyptians who dread the moment when the British evacuate. Naturally, this concerns individuals who've been working for them, getting higher wages than they would get from civilian employers.

Students are the ones that cause most of the trouble because they belong or rather are persuaded to belong to different political parties. They carry on demonstrations in the city's main streets and the police are required to re-establish order. They claim they want immediate evacuation, as well as annexation of the Sudan to the Egyptian Empire.

A number of Europeans are now thinking of going elsewhere as they're beginning to feel quite unsafe. Alexandria has changed a good deal. All shops have changed their inscriptions from European characters to Arabic. All the beautiful dance-halls, restaurants, cafes, etc. are infested with the new "rich" Egyptians. I, myself, can't walk alone in the street, or wear a nice dress without being glared at or annoyed.

As you see, we feel insecure and restless. About politics, which I confess I know very little, there is only this to report. Sidky Pasha's Cabinet is again to be "reshuffled." The reactions to the changes are still not discernible. To me, it seems that Nahas Pasha, a popular man with the lower classes, is trying very much to return to power once more. But then, as I said, "I don't know too much about politics."

Thespians Plan Fall Tryouts

Tryouts for this season's Thespian show will be held in Schwab auditorium, 7:30 p.m., Thursday, announced Bud Mellott, recently elected Thespian production manager. Students who are interested in lighting, properties, construction, costumes, dancing, singing, or the orchestra are asked to try out.

"Thespians are interested in original music or songs," Mellott said. "Tryouts for reading parts will be held next week."

Students Rush Book Stores

Most of the book dealers agree it will be easier to obtain books at the local stores this semester. Since the rush had been expected and the book lists have been sent in earlier from the college, the stores are better able to cope with the situation.

The Athletic Store, Keeler's, and Metzger's have anticipated the greater demand for books this fall and thus have ordered heavier supplies. Metzger's report that they have stocks of nearly all the books except those out of print, and all three book stores expect new supplies of books by the end of the week.

Veterans may charge books until they receive their book cards, at the Athletic Store, if their letters of eligibility are all right, and at Keeler's and Metzger's upon showing their matriculation cards. Book cards should be turned in immediately to the stores which have charged books.

In general, drawing instruments and slide rules are unobtainable although Metzger's received 25 this week that were ordered in March and small shipments may be received soon at the other two book stores.
