

You have Troubles?

For those who believe in the old adage, "Misery loves company," the following excerpts from TIME, the weekly news magazine, should sound a cheering note:

The barracks at Georgia's Emory University now have lights, but still no heat or water.

University of Maine students have moved into converted poultry houses.

Michigan State's basketball team can't play until beds are moved off the gymnasium floor.

At the University of California at Los Angeles, an ex-ensign shared a garage with a car.

At the University of Southern California, two students lived in an automobile for seven months, studied by night under street lamps.

"Everywhere there are nerve-rasping shortages of classrooms, study halls, textbooks, slide rules, eating places."

The Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity at U.C.L.A. had to hold two chapter meetings a week to get all its members in.

At the University of Maine, fraternity pledges were assigned to nursemaid and "sitter" duties by their married brothers.

To strengthen their weakened finances (many colleges are) admitting more veterans than they can properly instruct, and far more than they can provide with the intangibles of atmosphere, traditions, social and cultural standards.

After having the editors of TIME pour forth this fear-jerking story, that small room over in Pollock Circle doesn't seem so bad anymore, for things are just tough all over.

Greek Story

Reports from Europe the past couple of weeks tell of fighting between two factions in Greece. Engaged in this strife on one side is the present official government. The forces opposing the government, however, have not yet been clearly defined. Dispatches from Athens refer to them as "guerillas," "leftists," or "invaders." Whatever this faction is called by, the facts indicate that a minor but bloody war is now going on in Greece.

We think that the fighting now raging in the northern part of Greece has been caused by the recent return of King George to the throne of that country. Robert St. John, while here at the College, pointed out that the "free elections" in Greece this spring were not so free as we in America generally believe.

Greek citizens went to the polls and supposedly had their free choice between casting two ballots.

St. John, who was there at the time, claims that actually, each voter was handed two ballots of different colors. One was a ballot for the return of the king. The other was against his resuming his reign.

The procedure followed at the polls was for each voter to deposit one of the two ballots in the voting box and throw the one not used on the floor—in the presence of government election officials. Such an election, therefore, cannot really be considered the true voice of the Greek people.

This is mentioned now, because earlier this year, while abroad, this writer had the opportunity of talking to many Greeks who served as fliers in the British RAF. The unanimous opinion of these Greeks was that the majority of the people in Greece were against the return of King George and that though they were not for a monarchy, neither were they for a Communist regime. "Greece," they said, "wants a republic."

Great Britain has always been interested in the Balkans for reasons contingent to protecting her Mediterranean life-line. Her unwanted influence remains in Greece today in the presence of George.

We, here in the United States, must seriously consider yesterday's news dispatches of widespread fighting in Greece. Our present silent support of British meddling in Greece, that is, in the presence of King George on the throne, may result in not only our losing the friendship of the Greek people, but in forcing them to look toward Moscow instead of the United Nations for help.

Student X-Rays

Dr. E. S. Krug, Assistant College Physician in charge of X-ray, Laboratory, and Physiotherapy, reports that your X-ray films are on file for at least five years at the Health Service.

These films are valuable not only for the story they told at the time they were taken but may become doubly valuable as a basis for comparison when an X-ray is again taken of this part for some suspected ailment. The X-rays on file will be sent to your doctor for this purpose at any time you request this service.

Blue Merges With Pitt Band

Blue Band will make its last appearance of the season, Saturday at the Pitt game. This should prove to be a spectacular show with 80 of our boys in blue and 120 of Pitt's musicians merging in a routine worked out by Robert Arthur, Pitt bandmaster and former graduate of Penn State.

From a six-piece Drum and Bugle Corps 46 years ago to its present 80 piece band that climaxed its career last Saturday in a spectacular show before President Truman at Annapolis, there has been a long and rocky road for Blue Band.

Until the advent of World War II the band had worked up to 160 steps a minute. During the war they fell back to 1940 and did no formations. Now back at their old marching routine they are working up their steps again and giving more original formations than ever.

Hummel Fishburn, band director at State since 1938, traveled to Pittsburgh last Monday for a conference with Mr. Arthur. Mr. Fishburn said that the two bands will practice together Saturday morning at Pittsburgh and will play before the game and between halves.
