

LAKE SUCCESS—Atomic energy still has the United States and Russia deadlocked over how much to reduce world armaments.

Russia's delegate Andrei Gromyko, last night, offered a compromise designed to break the stalemate in the United Nations Security Council. American delegate Warren Austin refused to yield and insisted that the United States draft be approved. The United States and Russia are stymied on the question of defining the powers of the new Arms Reduction Commission and the Atomic Energy Commission. Austin wants the work of both groups to be kept sharply separated.

Junior Class Meets To Take Stand Tonight on Prom Corsage Issue

"Tonight the Junior class will have an opportunity to decide whether they want corsages at their dance," said Eugene Fulmer, Junior class president. The open discussion meeting has been scheduled in 121 Sparks at 7 o'clock tonight.

Fulmer explained in an open letter to the Junior class, printed in yesterday's Collegian, that the question had become widely debated as to whether or not corsages would be necessary at the Junior Prom which will be given in Recreation Hall, February 21. He therefore arranged this meeting to give the members of the class an opportunity to express their opinion.

"It is very important that every member of the Junior class attend this meeting," Fulmer said, "as the decision may influence future dances."

A special meeting of the Junior class advisory board composed of seven members and acting as a cross-section of the Junior class will be held before the general class meeting.

Members of the board are Adele Ernst, Peter Johnson, Alfred Lenz, Henrietta Monroe, Albert Rosenblatt, Ralph Rudy, and Elizabeth Watts.

Stuart Davis Adds To MI Art Exhibit

Of the 24 famous American water colorists represented in the current exhibition at the College, one is especially well-known to students and faculty on the campus.

He is Stuart Davis, who presented his painting, "Gloucester Landscape," to the College. It now hangs in the lounge of Old Main. Davis is represented in the current exhibit by "Boat Landing."

The exhibition, which will continue in the Mineral Industries Art Gallery until February 26, is open from 9 a. m. to 9 p. m. daily.

The 24 watercolors are from the permanent collection of The Whitney Museum of American Art, New York, and have been brought to the campus by the division of fine arts of the department of architecture.

Started in 1908 to aid American artists to place their work before the public, the Whitney Museum is about to become a branch of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, and is to occupy a wing of its own, adjoining the Metropolitan in Central Park.

The Whitney Wing will have the advantage of the Metropolitan's powerful backing and will in return give to the older museum an active participation in living American Art, to balance its necessary preoccupation with the art of the past, of all periods and nations.

In addition to the painting by Davis, the exhibit at the College includes watercolors by such well-known artists as Charles Burchfield, John Steuart Curry, Charles Demuth, Emil Ganso, John Marin, Reginald Marsh, and Boardman Robinson.

274 Year Old Play Satirizes Hypochondriac

Tonight at 8 o'clock when Frederic Vogel opens Moliere's comedy, "Imaginary Invalid," with the Prologue, a 274-year-old play, satirizing the hypochondriac, will be presented.

Jean Baptiste Poquelin, the author, under the "nom du theatre" of Moliere, has been named one of the world's greatest satiric dramatists, according to Merritt Stone, who adapted "Imaginary Invalid" for the American stage.

Stone mentions that Moliere's comedies, "The Would Be Gentleman," "The School for Wives," "The Misanthrope," and others, have been described by some as the keenest critical satires on social, professional, and moral conventions to be found in all dramatic literature.

Show director, Robert Reifsnieder, says "Moliere compares roughly to Shakespeare not necessarily in literary works but dramatic works."

It was while acting the title role as the hypochondriac, Monsieur Ardin, in "Imaginary Invalid" that Moliere died. Players will feature Harold Chidnoff in this role.

In charge of crews is William Folwell, stage manager. Ann Dunaway heads the paint crew; Elizabeth Dunkel, property crew; Gordon Fiske, construction crew; Frances Glass and Janet Taylor, costume crew; Duffield Sipes, furniture crew; and Karl Van D'Elden, advertising crew.

Robert Kendall is supervisor of the entire show, with Barbara Cooper as bookholder, Herbert Seaton, student technical director, and Ruth Rosenbaum as assistant technical director.
