Hip-Boots, Raincoats Order of the Day; Spring is here

Gung ho, all you lovers of nature! It's time to put on those hip-boots and wade out into muddy byways to enjoy the first whispers of spring.

To all you veterans of State College springs, it is needless to remind you to take your umbrella, wear your raincoat and any other rain repelling apparel you possess. There is no guarantee it will rain but if it doesn't you're not in the vicinity of State College.

In full attire, the nature lover struggles aimlessly through the mud. Perhaps he chooses the duck pond route via the cow barns or he may be the more timid soul who ventures only to enter paths of Hort woods. Regardless of the direction, all seek the same ultimate end.

To those who spend their hours in classes, the library, or the "Corner" this goal is beyond definition, for they have never experienced the thrill of seeing a pussywillow putting its head through its brown covering, a busy robin eagerly preparing for a large family, or a rushing stream swollen by winter snow and, ah yes, rain.

tee for the Faculty Luncheon Club at the College.

Other faculty members who will serve on the committee during the period April 1 to June 30 are R. W. McComb, associate librarian; W. R. Young, supervisor of correspondence courses in Central Extension; Dr. Helen R. LeBaron, assistant director of home economics; and Abbie Cromer, curator, Penn State Room, College Library.

These people shake their heads and wonder at those fools who put on their muddy boots and trudge happily down the country lane.
