

May Day, 'Mama,' Symphony

 end as a special entertainment for visiting mothers. The show will be staged at Schwab auditorium at 8 o'clock tonight and tomorrow and 1:30 tomorrow afternoon.

Tickets are still available for all three performances. Seats are priced at $1 including tax. Nancy Granger will star in the title role of Mama. Other leads are taken by Claire Cohen as Katrina and Harold Chidnoff as Uncle Chris.

College Symphony

The College Symphony Orchestra will feature "The From the New World' Symphony" by Anton Dvorak at its annual concert in Schwab Auditorium, 3:30 p.m. Sunday.

According to Director Hummel Fishburn, head of the music department, the doors will not be opened until 3 p.m. This is to prevent distraction of the orchestra in its pre-concert rehearsal.

AVC Members Will Race Group

Delegates for the National AVC Convention to be held in Milwaukee, Wis., June 19 to June 22, were chosen at the AVC meeting Wednesday night, said Mel Katinsky, publicity chairman.

Those chosen were Earl K... chapter chairman; Edward Banyai, Gayle Gearhart, L... Gifford, Francis Isenberg, Mel Katinsky, C. P. Miller, Leo Ridall, Leo Troy, and William Walker. Alternates are Norman Howell and Phillip Miller.

Katinsky said that new members are to pick up their membership cards at the next meeting, May 21, or at Skytop any weekend. He also said that Skytop will be closed tonight but that it will be open tomorrow and Sunday.

At the meeting, the members were addressed by Rev. Bruce E. Gideon, AVC chairman for the State of Pennsylvania. Rev. Gideon is now officiating at the Wesley Foundation, State College.

Chapel Bishop Corson To Speak Here

"A Design for Living" will be the subject of a talk by Dr. Fred P. Corson, bishop of the Methodist church, at the Chapel service in Schwab Auditorium, 11 a. m. Sunday.

Having served on the Methodist Peace Commission, Dr. Corson is deeply interested in a Christian solution for world problems. He was president of Dickenson College from 1934 to 1944 and at one time was president of the Association of Colleges of Pennsylvania.

Dr. Corson is also the author of many writings on Christianity and education.

Prof Doles Out Apples To Kind Students

Lynn Christy, assistant professor of English composition at the College, today turned "apple-polisher" and doled out apples and cigars—to his students.

His generosity was prompted by returns from a questionnaire in which Christy, in common with other instructors, was rated by his own students. Gratiified by the returns, Christy gave an apple to each of his students and to one class, composed wholly of men, he passed out cigars.

"They were very kind to me," Christy explained, "and I liked their suggestions—and criticisms."

Mom Outsmarts Coeds Via Campus Tours

Do you know why the old willow tree was planted on front campus? Which building is Penn State's oldest? Whether there is water in the Water Tower? Or where the oars to the "last raft" repose?

Probably not. Which means that your mother can outsmart you in Lion lore if she makes one of the campus tours scheduled for Saturday and Sunday.

The College invites students, their mothers, dads, and other visitors to make the short "walk-around" this week-end. Especially trained student guides will be available at Old Main Saturday beginning at 10:30 a.m. and Sunday beginning at 1:30 p.m.

The leisurely tour covers the central campus. More than 50 points of interest are passed or pointed out. It will be conducted, without cost, as a Mother's Day service of the College.

Extension Gives Short Course In Retail Lumber Training

Forty-nine men and one woman enter the third week of study Monday in a Retail Lumber Dealers Training short course under the Informal Instruction section of Central Extension. The aim of the course is to train minor executives for lumber dealers, according to Charles M. Graff, assistant supervisor of Informal Instruction.

The course, sponsored by the Middle Atlantic Lumbermen's Association of the National Retail Lumber Dealers, originated at the Universities of Washington and Denver, and has been given at 30 schools throughout the country.

This is the first time the four-week course has been offered at Penn State, although Mr. Graff said that Central Extension plans to repeat it in the fall.

Twenty-nine of the short-course students are from Pennsylvania,

11 from Maryland, seven from New Jersey, and one each from New York and Virginia. Lumber companies belonging to the Mid-Atlantic Association were given first choice in picking employees for the training.

Business law, salesmanship, advertising, and business statistics, taught by the department of economics, are included in the curriculum. The School of Engineering teaches blueprint reading, construction, insulation, cement and concrete, and a course in new ideas and trends.

Commercial lumber properties and seasoning and preservation of lumber are included in the program under the supervision of the School of Agriculture. Estimating, purchasing, and pricing, and paints, finishings, and millwork are taught by members of research associations of manufacturing companies of the state.
