

Alumnus Receives Acclaim For Book on Pacific 'Peace'

By FRANCES KEENEY

"The Leftovers," a forthcoming hard-hitting, witty report on the Pacific AFTER the war and on the men who have been waging the peace, by Larry Chervenak, class of '43, has received wide acclaim among newspaper columnists and writers, reported Marion Publications, publishers of the book.

Eleanor Roosevelt said of the book, "I think Mr. Chervenak has done a very interesting piece of writing. He has portrayed his characters well... I feel it should have a wide appeal."

"The Leftovers," said the publishers, is a dynamic report on the first year and a half of "peace" in the Pacific. The book includes 40 stories in which the scene shifts from lonely Tubabao Island to the drunken honky-tonk towns of the Philippines, from a Cavite religious festival to an army hospital in Okinawa to the headquarters of the French Indo-Chinese revolutionists.

Chervenak, a former Daily Collegian news editor, refers to the College and its students throughout his book. A former Penn State student is the central figure in three yarns written from a Shanghai night club. An article written aboard a destroyer tells the story of a Navy doctor whose decision to practice medicine came while attending the College. The author's "Weekend in Honkytonk Town" tells of a sailor in a Filipino "dive" trying to make the pianist play "Onward State."

Penn Staters form the complete cast of characters in a hilarious Army-Navy poker match aboard a troop transport. Even the Penn State reunion in Manila finds its way into Mr. Chervenak's book.

Chervenak, who served as a supply officer on a destroyer during the war, has written a series of articles for U.S. Navy Magazine, Army Times and Our Navy. He is also author of some freelance articles which have appeared in several publications, among them the Philadelphia Record and This Week Magazine.

Chervenak graduated from the College in October, 1943. In addition to being News Editor of the Collegian, he served as managing editor during the summer of 1943. He was also president of Sigma Delta Chi, journalism honorary, and was a national semi-finalist in an all-college radio debate contest. He was a member of Penn State Players, Thespians, Liberal Arts School Student Council, Pershing Rifles, Interfraternity Council, Phi Eta Sigma, freshman men's honorary, and was active in campus politics. He belonged to the Theta Xi fraternity, serving as president.
