ROTC Exemption For Vets May End

Veterans who will enter the College in the Fall may be taking ROTC subjects in order to get their military experience credits, if a plan presented to the College Senate is approved, Col. Ben-Hur Chastaine said yesterday.

According to the report on file at the Registrar's office, the Committee on Military Instruction seeks to amend a report submitted by the Committee on Academic Standards to read as follows:

Committee Recommends

The Committee on Academic Standards recommends that returning veterans who have served in the armed forces for a period of 13 weeks or longer, be granted four credits for the basic courses in physical education for the freshman and sophomore years, and six credits equal to the credits allowed for basic courses in ROTC, providing that the veteran shall have had the equivalent training during his service in the armed forces.

To determine this, the military department will screen all veterans to ascertain deficiencies in military knowledge. When these deficiencies exist, the veteran shall be required to take subjects, ROTC or others, if he wants the six credits for basic ROTC. The NROTC will have its own screening program for Navy veterans.

Chastaine Asks Change

At the meeting of the Senate, Col. Chastaine asked that section C, Rule 81 of the Regulations for Undergraduate Students be changed to read, "Students who are graduates of other colleges and those who enter this College with higher than sophomore standing, unless they have begun the basic course at another institution." The word "sophomore" being substituted for the word "freshman," which was the previous case.

Col. Chastaine said that it is a War Department policy to exempt veterans from military training unless they desire it. This program is intended for the new students that are to enter in the Fall. He said that this would be the case for those veterans who desire the six credits for basic ROTC.
