Teachers Observe Natural Resources

More than 30 elementary and secondary school teachers have enrolled in the second session of the Conservation Education Laboratory.

Teachers are sent to the Laboratory on scholarships provided by state, civic, and conservation groups. The three-week session closes Saturday.

The conservation course consists mainly of field trips where teachers may observe at first-hand the natural resources of Pennsylvania. Study under consultants familiar with each of the State's major natural resources—minerals, forests, soil, and wildlife—will supplement the work.

McCarthy —

senator, "are today advocating a large land army for our nation. This preparation would be senseless."

McCarthy spoke 15 minutes, then asked for questions from the audience.

Queried on the Taft-Hartley labor bill, McCarthy declared the legislation gave a balance of power between labor and management.

"This bill was more construed than any other in this Congress. I think it is fair and honest," he said. "It will not hurt a single working man, but will take some power from the labor bosses."

Questioned about the rise in student veterans' allowances following his stage appearance, McCarthy said he felt the raise was sufficient.

"I think the subsistence is enough to help the veterans attending school," he said. "They are not expected to live on this amount. It is merely an aid. It would be impossible to provide adequate funds for all veterans attending school."

College Gives Business Tests

The College will participate in a cooperative test program for teachers of business education, Dr. James J. Gemmell, associate professor of economics and business education at the College, said today.

The project is sponsored by the National Office Management Association and the United Business Education Association branch of the National Education Association.

In addition to setting up standardized business entrance tests in typing, shorthand, filing and other business fundamentals, NOMA is organizing a plan whereby progressive business offices will be willing to hire teachers of business education for short periods to enable them to obtain actual business experience to carry back to the classrooms, Dr. Gemmell said.
