The football coaches themselves select the 1947 ALL-AMERICAN TEAM

Today's Post brings you the country's top football players as picked by the men best qualified to judge—the members of the American Football Coaches Association. Representing virtually every college in the U. S., these coaches waited until every player could be judged on the basis of his performance throughout the entire season.

Association members saw nearly 4500 college football players before choosing the country's first-, second- and third-string All-American teams. Their selections are analyzed in detail in today's Post. If you're a football follower, you can't afford to miss the authoritative All-American line-up.
