

IFC Distributes Third Newsletter

Third and final issue of the IFC Newsletter for the current semester will be distributed Monday, Joseph Succop, publicity chairman of the interfraternity council, said today.

Two copies will be sent to each of the fraternities on campus, and extra copies will be available at Student Union desk in Old Main.

Feature story of the issue will highlight information about candidates from the College fraternities and sororities for the publication, "Great Greeks on the American Campus." These candidates will be selected from among those fraternities and sorority men and women who have done most to better student life on the campus.

Other articles will include information on the forthcoming Interfraternity-Pan-Hellenic Dance, a report on the fraternity caterers' committee, and a story on the co-op.

Skating Party Heads Hillel's Social Plans

A roller skating party open to all is being sponsored by the social committee of the Hillel Foundation, according to Ernest Fanwick, co-chairman of the committee. Those interested in attending will meet at the Foundation 7 p.m. Sunday. The price is 50 cents.

Free rhumba lessons will be offered by the committee at the Foundation 8 p.m. Thursday. Mr. Fanwick said. Everybody is invited to attend.

He also mentioned that the weekly Hillelzapoppin will be held from 9 to 12 o'clock tomorrow night.

Flyers Offer Low-cost Plan to Earn License

The State Flying Club offers anyone who wishes to learn how to fly, the opportunity to earn a private aircraft pilot's license for approximately $140.

A spokesman for the club, Eleanor Kelly, said that the cost of earning a license at most airports is $400. Under the Penn State's Club's system, however, each member pays a $125 initiation fee, thereby becoming part-owner of the two planes owned by the club for the duration of his membership.

It is 442 paces from the Corner to the bulletin board near Carnegie Hall.

Blindfold Chess Champ Includes 30-Board Game, Lecture in Exhibition

An exhibition will be given by George Koltanowski, world's blindfold chess champion, in the Northeast Lounge of Atherton Hall at 1:30 tomorrow afternoon, said Marion Schwimmer, president of the Chess Club.

Mr. Koltanowski will play a 30 board game in which he will match wits with thirty opponents simultaneously. Following the 30 board match he will demonstrate his ability to play while blindfolded and give a lecture on chess.

The demonstration is open to the public and no admission charge will be made.

Anyone wishing to play Mr. Koltanowski is invited to do so by paying $1 to cover expenses. For further information call Marion Schwimmer, 114 Atherton Hall, or John Ekey, 4402.

Brawn Over Brain! Manager Misses Train

Managers of athletic teams are chosen for their resourcefulness—at least that's what it says in the books.

When Coach Bob Higgins turned his Nittany Lion football team loose in Dallas the day after the game, he emphasized that they must be present at the train station by a certain time.

He repeated the departure time over and over so that no one would miss the Lion Special. The coach felt that it was unnecessary to draw diagrams for the managers so when a count revealed that all the team had made the train, he breathed a sigh of relief.

Later it was discovered that someone was missing. One of the managers, Frank Philippbar, was not to be found.

When Philippbar caught up with the team in St. Louis, his explanation was simple. "I couldn't find the station."

Sewing Classes Begin Next Week

A second series of adult sewing classes will begin next week, Miss Marrietta Henderson, a member of the College and State College High-School faculties, said today.

Classes include a beginners' group, which will meet on Mondays from January 12 until March 22 at 3 p.m., and intermediate class in clothing selection and construction meeting on Wednesdays from January 14 to March 24 at 2 p.m., and a class in tailoring and advanced sewing, meeting on Thursday evenings from January 15 to March 18 at 7 p.m. All classes will be held in the State College High School Homemaking Department and will last two hours. They will be taught by Miss Henderson.

Since classes are limited, persons interested should contact Miss Henderson by calling 2402 during the day and 3724 at night.

Speech Clinic Helps Those Handicapped

By Peter Warker

In fulfilling its role as a correction center for those afflicted with a speech or hearing handicap, the Speech and Hearing Clinic treats four main groups of patients during the academic year.

In the first group are those students of the College who are screened out of the incoming undergraduate classes at the beginning of every school year in a speech and hearing test given by the clinic.

Those College students with speech or hearing deficiencies sufficiently acute to cause vocational, educational, or social handicaps are treated for a fee of one dollar a semester. There are about 50 of these students now in training with approximately 30 more on the waiting list.

The second group treated comes to Penn State from the State Office of Vocational Education, Bureau of Rehabilitation. This office refers to the College those individuals over 16 years of age who are unable to make satisfactory vocational adjustments because of speech and/or hearing defects.

Patient Improvement

"Many of these patients are completely unintelligible when they come to the College," said Professor McDonald. "All of them show some improvement after training, while some have gone on to become nurses, beauticians, hospital technicians, and college students."

"One girl," continued Professor McDonald, "was almost unintelligible when she came to us last year. After 18 weeks of training she was mistaken for a clinic instructor by a group of visitors."

On Friday afternoons and Saturday mornings, the clinic's staff diagnoses and advises out-patient cases that are referred to the College from throughout the state. These cases, comprising the third group treated at the clinic, number from four to six a week. They are sent to the summer clinic sponsored by the College or are referred to one or more of the 70-odd speech correctionists in the state. State College public school children make up the fourth group treated by the clinic.

Summer Sessions

In addition to these patients, the clinic every year sponsors a program for deaf or hard-of-hearing children under five years of age in June, and also a summer residential speech clinic. During the main summer session, extending from June 28 to August 7, the summer clinic will treat approximately 40 selected cases. These cases are chosen to give the clinic a cross-section of the major types of speech defects, and the patients are treated by summer student clinicians working under the close supervision of the clinic's regular staff.

A great demand, destined to increase in the future, now exists for speech and hearing correctionists, according to Professor McDonald.

"Employed in the Pennsylvania public schools at the present time," he said, "is a total of between 70 and 80 trained clinicians. But the total demand in the State's public schools alone numbers about 1,300."

Unable to Fill Demand

"We receive here at the clinic at least twice as many requests for speech correctionists as we can fill," he said, "while the hearing clinician demand is even greater in proportion to the supply."

Although public schools employ the largest number of speech and hearing instructors, explained Professor McDonald, many applications are also being received from hospitals, the Veterans Administration, the Society for Crippled Children and Adults, Leagues for the Hard of Hearing, and other college clinics. Furthermore, he added, there is a wide field for those desiring to enter private practice.

Salaries for graduates vary from $2,000 to $4,000 a year depending on the field.
