

Permanent SU Opens at DuBois

The first permanent student union building on any Pennsylvania State College campus has just been opened at the DuBois Undergraduate Center, Dr. David B. Pugh, superintendent of undergraduate centers, said.

Built through the combined efforts of the community and the faculty who donated both money and labor, the building is a concrete block structure.

Its main feature is a lounge room 45 feet square with a huge fireplace around which students gather during sandwich hours and in the evenings. There is also a recreation room as well as offices for extra-curricular activities.

The "Field House" is located right on the DuBois campus, making it readily accessible to the 385 students at the Center.

arrangements for the academic exchange of students, planning study tours, work camps, and hosteling, orienting and aiding foreign students who are studying on American campuses, sponsoring WSSF fund drives for relief, and sending official delegates representing U. S. students to various international conferences.

NSA, which was recognized as the only official organization representing the U. S. student bodies, recently was granted a seat on UNESCO.

Controversial Issue

The most controversial issue at the Wisconsin convention was discussion over affiliation of the NSA with the International Union of Students (IUS). After much debate it was decided to affiliate providing that IUS was willing to make a few changes in its procedure and constitution.

A large majority of delegates present favored affiliation for two reasons:

1. The great and urgent need for specific and large-scale means of contact and familiarization of the students of countries whose present mutual differences, suspicions, and lack of information may well lead to continuing and increasing unrest and even war throughout the world.

2. The more immediately practical advantage of affiliation with IUS—the many international projects and activities in which American students and colleges can profitably take part as a member-organization of IUS.

In considering affiliation the convention recognized that the majority of the present leadership of IUS are far to the left of American students, and that IUS has tended to lay greater stress upon political activity and expressions of opinions than is customary or desirable in student organizations in the U. S.

NSA May Remain Minority

It was realized that NSA may for some time remain in a minority position on many major issues within IUS, but that with the conditions for affiliation adopted by the convention NSA will be protected from possible abuse as the representative of the U. S. students.

The convention came to the conclusion that mutual understanding and acquaintanceship with other countries can be decisive in helping to avert more intensified friction which may lead to an atomic world war.

NSA's position in IUS offers an opportunity for extensive and significant modifications in the extreme policy of the organization.

IUS is at present the largest international association of national student organizations, and includes countries such as the Soviet Union, Asiatic and colonial lands with whom far-reaching cooperation and joint activities for students are difficult outside of IUS today.

The convention felt that affiliation with IUS must be based on a sincere and whole-hearted intention to work with member countries in friendship and without hidden purposes.
