

Cagers Invade Washington For Georgetown Skirmish

The ambitious Georgetown Hoyas, having won ten out of the twenty games played so far this season, will attempt to move up from the halfway mark tonight when they entertain the Nittany Lions in the National Guard Armory at Washington, D. C. Playing a twenty-seven game schedule, the Hoyas were smacked down time after time in their recent disastrous tour of the Mid-West and South.

With a smaller but equally difficult schedule, the Lawthermen have also won half of the contests played so far this season, and both teams will be trying to complete their schedules on the black side of the ledger.

Although the stellar Andy Kostecka was dismissed from the squad for insubordination, the Georgetown team can rely on Danny Kraus, All-American guard for the last two years, to provide the spark in the team.

SEASON RECORD

Georgetown started the season this year with a red hot record of six straight wins, but the long road trip smashed their percentage down to .500 as they were handed six straight losses. The most important of these were the 39-45 decision to Santa Clara and a 69-77 topping by Notre Dame.

Returning home, the Hoyas took Maryland 52-40; this, however, was offset by losses to Canisius and LaSalle. After upsetting Texas Wesleyan 48-37, the Washington team slipped badly and was swamped 51-70 by Holy Cross and 36-87 by North Carolina State.

Coach Lawther will start the same team that took the floor in the Syracuse game to try to boost the squad's record on foreign floors. So far this year, the cagers have triumphed only twice in the six games played away from home.

Whitey McKown and John Kulp are slated for the guard posts. Terry Ruhlman is listed for the center spot, and Jack Biery and Milt Simon will handle the forward positions.

Around the Rim

When the Penn State basketball team tangles with Georgetown tonight, the fray will be listed as the Nittany Lions vs. the Hoyas. Almost everyone on campus knows that the Penn State team derived its name from the large mountain lions that roamed the surrounding hills, but very few know how the Washington, D. C. team was given the strange name of Hoya.

According to the "Dictionary of Nicknames," some years ago the Georgetown rooters used a cheer containing the Greek words Hoya Saxa, meaning hard as a rock. The rest of the cheer dissolved with time and just the Hoya remained to give the team its pseudonym.

Perhaps the oldest nickname of our hoop rivals is the trade mark of the West Virginia squad, Mountaineers. In 1891 the school adopted the name in order to fall in line with the name of the state.

Although most people think that the Temple Owl is used to signify wisdom, the reason that the college decided to adopt the Owl as its "nom-de-plume" is that, "very few schools use this appellation."

The last bison in the East lived in the vicinity of Lewisburg; the Bucknell athletic teams adopted the animal for its standard.

Two other members of the cat family, panthers and tigers, are listed among the College opponents.

Riflemen Sweep 4 Out of 5 Meets

The varsity rifle team defeated four out of five opponents in postal matches held recently.

Victims of Coach Harold W. Yount's sharpshooters were Fordham, Massachusetts U., Niagara, and Clarkson Tech. The loss was suffered at the hands of Columbia.

The College rifle team now have a record of seven wins and a lone defeat. The Lions had previously beaten Purdue, Harvard, and Drexel Institute of Technology.

Arrangements tentatively have been made to take the top ten teammen to Lehigh for a shoulder-to-shoulder match. Coach Yount also plans to have his men take part in the national matches of this sector which will be held in the future.
