

Explanation, Please

Early in 1946, when the large majority of veterans returned to the campus, they found that the GI Bill of Rights paid their tuition, subsistence, book and supplies cost. At that time each vet received a $5 check which could be spent in any way the vet desired.

A year later the outright gift of money was found to be contrary to regulations of the Veterans Administration and a receipt system was installed. Expendable supplies were purchased by the veteran and the receipts for his purchase were turned in to the College for auditing and refund. This year that plan was abandoned not by the VA but by the College itself. No plan at all has been substituted in its place.

A survey conducted this month has shown that Penn State is alone in this action. If the supplies are to be given the veterans, it must be by the College. The VA only steps in if the system is not approved. Only certain items such as clothing and fountain pens are on the taboo list.

Other schools have found approved systems which give the veteran such expendable supplies as paper, bluebooks, notebooks, etc. This usually comes to a total of $5 per semester. Perhaps the College administration feels that this is too small an item to warrant the bookkeeping expense involved but to the hard-pressed veteran, it means a great deal.

Until this year, book cards were issued and presented to the book store for the required texts. Now the College has seen fit to substitute the receipt plan with the result that the veteran must make an outlay of $15-$20 at the beginning of each semester. This is not refunded until at least a month after.

Perhaps men who deal in thousands of dollars cannot see how these two new College policies have worked hardships on the veterans but fraternity men and independents who pay out their entire subsistence checks for room and board will say it does.

At least an explanation should be given.—BIF

Opposes Cabinet Action

TO THE EDITOR: One of my greatest disappointments at college was Cabinet's decision not to support suspension of patronage at local barber shops. This conservatism or lack of courage of conviction is a disgusting thing to find among the majority of representatives of what I feel is a liberal student body. Why be afraid to let two thousand people decide between lip service and support of pledged ideals?

I have cut from Collegian the voting record of this proposal and will consult it at future college elections to know by actions how candidates and their supporters really feel. I suggest you reprint this record at those times.

Let's hope CORE will not be stagnated by this decision.

Student Church Groups

TO THE EDITOR: Religion-in-Life week came and went, right past 90 per cent of the student body. The Campus Committee, however, felt that the week was very successful, as evidenced by the tremendous increase in demand for speakers for living units. It seemed to come as quite a surprise to most students, especially Protestants, that religion could offer an intelligent reasonable faith and an interested motivated approach to social and economic problems. If Penn Staters were not aware of this it is high time they found out; if now they do know, then in all fairness to themselves they ought to investigate seriously.

If students had the interest they showed by attending various discussions, they would join individuals or groups with similar ideas. One place where such

Air Force Reserves Organize Campus Unit

Plans to form an Air Force reserve campus unit were made at a meeting Thursday night, when a group of former Air Force men signed to join the proposed unit.

After its formation is approved by the Eleventh Air Force, the unit will spend from two to four hours a month training in "basic" Air Force work, said Charles Stiles, who presided at the first meeting.

Long range purpose of the unit is to enable its student members to "keep a hand in the game," thereby improving their chances for promotion in the Air Force reserve after they graduate, said Stiles.

So You Wanna Be A Disk Jockey?

Hey, Buster, and doll-face too
 We gotta show that's just for you.
 Here's your chance to "spin 'em in"
 And grab a prize worth twice a fin.

HERE'S THE PITCH:

Beginning next Monday night, March 8th, and continuing each weekday night thereafter, the Penn State Photo Shop and the Penn State Camera Shop will give all you would-be disc jockeys (guys and gals alike) a chance to "spin 'em in" over WMAJ to suit yourself. All you have to do is to pick up an entry blank at either the Photo Shop or the Camera Shop on East College Avenue. You'll be notified when it's your turn to make with the platter chatter. Three big prizes will be awarded to the three hottest jockeys each week, and a grand prize will go to some lucky contestant at the end of the contest. Don't wait, gate. Mail your entry in this date.

Radio Station WMAJ

Remember . . . Contest entry blanks are available only at The Penn State Photo Shop and Penn State Camera Shop on East College Avenue.
