'Engineer' Features Ultrasonics Experiments

The inside story of the ultrasonic experiments made by Penn State scientists and recently featured in Life magazine will appear in the March issue of the Penn State Engineer, which will be sold Monday at Student Union and the Corner Room.

As a result of their acoustic experiments, these scientists have found innumerable uses for "silent" sound, which range from the destruction of living organisms to the homogenizing of milk, according to the article. Other articles in the March issue include articles on radiant heating and engineering organization.

WSGA Denies Ball Permits

Two o'clock permissions will only be given to coeds for dances on big weekends which all students can attend. This decision was made by WSGA Senate after turning down a request by the Military Ball Committee for two o'clocks.

Possible projects to raise money for the drive were discussed. All suggestions were tabled until Thursday when a definite decision will be made.

The organization approved a $10 contribution for Religion-in-Life Week.

quest by students for establishing a co-op, then decided at a meeting January 23 and 24 to reconsider its decision following a volley of student protests.

In a letter to Thomas J. Lannen, All-College president, Acting Secretary Morse said,

"The Trustee committee requests that students do not attempt to influence it with propaganda by mail. What the committee would like to have are sound reasons presented by the student representatives April 2."
