

It's That Time Again!

The campaign is on! The opening whistle sounded at midnight Sunday and, according to the Elections Code, the battle for All-College, Junior and Senior class officers has officially opened.

During the next week, the candidates and clique work-horses will be making the rounds of the dorms and Greek-letter houses for the purposes of lining up the votes. Each party will be claiming that they have all the best candidates and urging a straight-party vote.

In campus politics, a straight slate is not needed for the individual candidates to do a good job. After the election, party affiliation is usually forgotten. Members of one party usually don't work to spite the other clique's elected officers. So it comes down to the fact that individual qualities are the most important thing to consider before casting the ballots.

When the candidates come around to you for your vote, talk to them! Ask them questions! If they say they support the Student Union (and it's a tradition that they always do), find out just what they plan to do, how they plan to do it, and if it can be done.

Another thing to find out when you talk to those candidates is where their first loyalty lies. At the clique meetings Sunday night, the large majority of office-seekers promised that their first duty was to the party. You know that's not true. Their primary responsibility is to you—the voter. Cliques are merely the instruments set up to select the best candidates.

This election should be more than just another popularity race. Quite a few of the candidates on both slates are newcomers to student government. It should make no difference whether a candidate comes from a fraternity or a campus dorm as long as he has the right ideas in which you believe.

Find out about each of the candidates before you decide. The money he will be spending will be yours and the rules he makes will affect you.—BIF

Carnegie vs. Sparks

TO THE EDITOR: If these two buildings were to have an argument, I feel certain that Carnegie would be victorious.

All one has to do is to take a class in the Carnegie side of Sparks to know what I am driving at. I suspect that Carnegie is using the horn-blowing tactics of Gideon, the Biblical General, as he swooped down upon the enemy under the fanfare of raucous and inconsistent horns—I don't wonder that they were routed.

I'm sure that the Administrative Officials would register a complaint to the Music Department if they were to try to do their daily chores in the offices situated in the Carnegie side of Sparks.

I realize that the music lovers must practice; but also, the great majority of the students must Get Their Notes, Too!

Here's to alleviating the noise somewhat at least, forever, if possible.

A Job for John L.

TO THE EDITOR: Apropos the Russian problem and the coal strike I cannot contain myself...

The U.S. Government can save the country plenty of grief simply by recognizing and putting to use the obvious attributes of John L. Lewis. John L. is a natural for bolstering our forces in negotiation with the Russians.

Washington seems to be having tremendous difficulty not only in understanding the Russian mind but in effecting a strategy to cope with Russian tactics. Therefore I suggest that the government bring Mr. Lewis into the State Department where his redoubtable success as a negotiator might cause some demoralization in the Kremlin.

In a direct test with Joe Stalin himself the odds are all with Mr. Lewis. For Lewis could outbargain, out-yell, out-confuse, and out-live Uncle Joe. Besides he's bigger and as stubborn as any of the Russians.

As one last parting gesture to his faithful followers, he would magnanimously, with Shakespearean phrase, say the magic words which would send them back to mining coal. The government can't lose!

—Daniel W. Triem, '40.

The award will be made on the basis of character, leadership, and scholarship, Dr. Lyman E. Jackson, dean of the school of Agriculture, explained. While the award will be made independently each year, it may be given to the same student two years in succession.

Purpose of the awards, also established at Ohio State University and the University of West Virginia, is to encourage the use of radio as a means of disseminating agricultural information; to help train agricultural students in broadcasting techniques; and to help maintain good public relations between the station and the colleges and universities concerned.

The initial awards, to be effective for the 1948-49 year, will be announced on May 9.
