

IFC Accepts Two Parts Of Point-Rating System

Inter-Fraternity Council voted to accept two parts of the proposed three-part point-rating system of campus fraternities at the council meeting Wednesday night.

The parts adopted by the council are those dealing with scholarship and athletic point ratings. The third part, dealing with activities of house members, was returned to the committee, who submitted the system, for revision.

Under the proposed plan, each fraternity is allowed points according to the number of members actively engaged in activities. The fraternity securing the highest number of points will be accredited as the outstanding fraternity on campus.

A report on the proposed pledge rushing system was made by Robert Keller but was turned down by council members. The pledging code for the fall semester of 1948 was adopted.

Sixty-nine feet was the depth of the first producing oil well, operated by Colonel E. L. Drake.

The project, which has already been under research for a year, is designed to measure stresses and strains of plastic materials.

A second research problem currently being attacked by the department is the determination of aluminum fatigue, under the auspices of the Research Corporation of New York.

The aluminum fatigue problem has been worked on in the laboratory for over a year and a half.
