

National Affairs Talks Treat Campus Problems

Inter-campus and intra-campus problems, both on a regional and national scale, will be considered in four National Affairs Workshops at the NSA Regional Assembly. Existing committees and programs will be explained and discussed, and plans for extension and expansion will be considered.

Students who have already participated in certain phases of NSA's domestic program will act as discussion leaders, explaining existing facilities for the handling of specific problems. A critical review of accomplishments to date and suggestions for improvement will follow.

After the complete program has been worked out, colleges will be selected to handle specific phases through the establishment of committees on their campuses.

Each delegate, alternate and observer at the assembly, except a few special committees, will attend both a domestic and an international workshop of his choice. Proceedings will be as informal as possible.

Workshop discussion leaders will report on the adopted programs in the second plenary session tomorrow, for criticism and ratification by the entire assembly.

Racial Relations

Larry Weiskrantz, of Swarthmore College, will lead the discussion in this important workshop. He was named chairman of NSA's Regional Race Relations Clinic at the December convention, and has brought to the task his wide background of experience as an active member of the race relations group already existing at Swarthmore.

Among other activities, the NSA Clinic has recently sent out a comprehensive questionnaire to all regional colleges concerning campus discrimination. The results of this questionnaire, and suggestions for future questionnaires, will be an important item on this workshop's agenda.

There will be a general survey of discriminatory practices, and a consideration of the most effective methods of eliminating such practices. Specific projects will be outlined, and colleges selected for their implementation.

Government

Many regional colleges have ineffective student governments, or have none at all. One of NSA's most comprehensive programs is in the field of student government. The Regional Student Government Clinic, headed by Betty Hamilton of Bryn Mawr College, will make a report in this workshop, and problems connected with the establishment and bettering of student governments will be considered.

History Reveals Growth

Wisconsin from August 30 to September 7 last year with 750 delegates representing 1,390,000 students in 356 American colleges and universities. These delegates worked day and night to write the USNSA constitution, plan a comprehensive program of activities, and form the first representative national student organization in the United States.

Student Governments

Although a number of national youth groups were represented at the Constitutional Convention, it was decided that only officially-constituted student governing bodies on the member campuses will send delegates to the National Student Congresses to be held each summer.

The Convention voted to begin negotiations with the International Union of Students for affiliation on a non-political basis. Programs of activities on domestic and international levels were also set up. Each of these programs is headed by a national vice-president of USNSA. To carry out these programs, regional clinics have been set up to undertake concrete action on specific problems.

The Convention also voted to seek representation on the United States National Commission for UNESCO.

The first year of life of USNSA has been one of establishing the organization on a firm basis. Regional and sub-regional organizations have been set up to further this aim, and the ratification of the NSA Constitution, which was necessary to give the organization a formal legal status, has now been accomplished.

Cultural Activities

A regional music festival is being planned for the fall. Several colleges have expressed particular interest in making arrangements for this festival.

The Minnesota Region of NSA has recently sent a Carleton College performance of "Antigone" on a statewide tour of NSA colleges. The possibilities of similar road tours for outstanding regional drama performances in this area will be discussed. Art exhibitions, lecture and debating tours sponsored by NSA are also on the agenda for consideration.

Student Welfare

At this workshop, Penn State will report on the progress of its plans for a student cooperative store. Personal problems counseling, employment services, and student housing are among the other items on the diversified agenda of this group.

First Student Congress

The first National Student Congress which meets this fall at Madison, Wisconsin, will consider the policies and programs of a college student organization that is representative of a large cross-section of American student thought and opinion.
