record after the user is asleep, and a sponge-rubber pillow containing a whispering speaker.

In past experiments Mr. Elliot has found that students taking the sleep teaching performed daily lessons with more ease and speed than those who did not take it.

Beyond education possibilities, Max Sherover, inventor of the apparatus used in sleep teaching, believes that the technique may also have value in curing mental illness. He is planning to distribute record players for under-the-pillow use to leading mental hospitals.

Mr. Elliot explains his new theory in the fact that learning seems to occur easily during sleep because the distracting influence of light and other senses is absent.

and the first and third Tuesdays of each month.

Three Plays
Three plays are being produced this season, which began June 23 and will continue through August 2. After each performance refreshments are served in the theatre.

Town and Nine is sponsored by the State College Community Theatre Guild, a recently organized group which is leading the town in establishing State College as a summer dramatics center.

Gene Wettstone, coach of the College's NAAU championship gymnastics team and of the U. S. Olympic squad, is portrayed in the July issue of "Huddle," a Pittsburgh-published sports magazine now on sale at Graham's.

The article, entitled "Penn State's Gym Gem," was written by Tom Morgan, a Pittsburgher and sports editor of The Daily Collegian. Much of the material appeared previously in Morgan's column, "Olympic Gym Chatter."

Article Relates Chem. Growth

The growth of chemistry at the College since the beginning of the institution was described in a recent issue of the Journal of Chemical Education.

The article, written by Dr. Grover C. Chandlee, is one of a series, "Chemical Education in American Institutions," citing ten leading colleges and universities.

Two factors, Dr. Chandlee says, put chemistry in an impressive position at Penn State very early. One was the influence of Dr. Evan Pugh, the first president, a renowned chemist. The other was the College's early recognition that students needed to be trained in the science as well as in the classics.

Graduate study and research are comparatively recent. Dr. Chandlee explained, but 285 students have earned the M.S. degree and 220 the Ph.D. degree in the past 25 years.

In the last 50 years, approximately 50,000 students have taken two or more semesters in chemistry.

The Petroleum Refining Laboratory, which pursues fundamental research on petroleum and its products, and the Ellen H. Richards Institute which carries on research in the relation of chemistry to problems in the fields of foods, clothing, and shelter, are closely associated with the Department.
