

Two Organizations Represent Independent Men on Campus

Two organizations, the Association of Independent Men, or AIM, and the Penn State Club, have been organized on the campus to take care of independent men's representation in student government and to help enrich the social life of non-fraternity men.

The AIM is a new organizing group begun last semester to give independent men a more equitable voice in All-College Cabinet.

Currently in the organizational stage, its constitution has already been approved by Cabinet, and a committee appointed last semester is now working on a program designed to help the Council do its work as effectively as possible.

Representation

The proposed plan would send one representative from each Pollock Circle and Nittany dormitory and one representative from each district among students off campus to the AIM Council. Districts will be apportioned among town men in proportion to student population.

The president of the Council will be named as its representative to All-College Cabinet acting as the voice of all independent men.

All-College President William Lawless appointed Edmund Walacavage acting chairman of the AIM Committee Monday, replacing Chairman Don Little who was stricken with appendicitis.

Penn State Club

On the social side of the independent men's student life stands the Penn State Club, first founded on the campus in 1935.

Organized primarily as a social club, it has planned hikes, picnics, cabin parties, and dances for the coming semester. Joint activities with Philotes, independent women's organization, begun last semester will be continued this fall. Ernest Sladies, president of the club, reported.

In addition to their social program the Club members annually stage an All-College Talent Show in Schwab Auditorium and name the Independent Man of the Year. Last year's winner of this award was All-College secretary - treasurer, Eugene Fulmer.

The Penn State Club also enters athletic teams in most sports on the intramural sports program.

Those men interested in joining the club may contact Ernest Sladies by calling 2737. The club room in 321 Old Main will be open for inspection every day this week.

For the Veteran in a Muddle, Include 'Gal' in the Huddle

Veterans, are you trying to find a place to live? Are you short on money? Go see Gal. Can't you get in the school you want. Are your grades below par? Or are you just plain in a muddle? Whatever your trouble, go see Gal.

Gal's the man that will listen to your story, and then send you to the person who knows what to do about your problem. Prof. Robert E. Galbraith, besides teaching English composition, is the Faculty Counselor for Veterans, with his office located at 109A Old Main.

Known informally as the veterans' moan and groan man, Gal has listened to their troubles ever since the vets started returning to school. This year Professor Galbraith says there are a lot less veterans that need his help than before, because these men have already had a year at college, and so their problems have decreased in number.

Galbraith is also in charge of the trailer camp, Windcrest, for married veterans. His worries are all the married vets who need a place to live. Although the number who want trailers now greatly exceeds the availability, the vets' counselor pointed out that the housing situation has been relieved so it is only half as critical as last year.

Assisted by his secretary, Miss Case, Professor Galbraith also administers the Kunkle fund, a loan fund from which married veterans may borrow up to $150 a semester.

problems in housing, course choices, vocational guidance, study plans, and many others. For help with your problem, vet, go see Gal.

charged. The same procedure will be followed by any student who loses his card.

All veterans must register in the basement of Carnegie Hall after completing registration in Rec Hall.

Hours for registration are 8 a.m. to 12 noon and 1:30 to 5 p.m. today and 8 a.m. to 12 noon tomorrow.

Collegian Edit Meetings

All senior editorial board members of the Daily Collegian must attend a compulsory meeting in the Collegian office at 9:30 a.m. Sunday, said Lew Stone, editor.

This meeting, the first of the first semester is extremely important, he added.

The junior editorial board will meet in the Collegian office at 11 a.m. Sunday. No excuses will be acceptable, said Stone.

Glee Club Tryouts

The last chance students will have to tryout for parts in the College glee club will be in 200 Carnegie Hall, 7 p.m., Tuesday.

The first chair to be established in the liberal arts at the College was that of English and rhetoric in 1889.

Collegian Classifieds

Classified advertisements to be inserted in the Daily Collegian may be placed in the Collegian office, Carnegie Hall, anytime beginning Monday.

The charge for these ads will be: 17 words or less, 40 cents per insertion. Three insertions, of the same ad, to be run on consecutive days, will be $1. Three words for five cents will be charged for any words over 17, for each day of insertion.

All ads must be paid for in cash. No ads will be accepted over the phone or through the mail unless money is enclosed. The deadline will be 12 noon on the day preceding the issue of the first insertion.

DIG THIS

Four men and a girl were knocking themselves out in State College while most of you were vacationing; result, the GENE-BOOTH Quintette — the biggest, swingin'est, sweetest, singin'est little band you ever heard.

We still have ten Friday and three Saturday nights open between now and next June.

The BROWSE

Welcome to Penn State! New students, old students, X-GIs, everybody! For you new students, this weeks has been a busy one. You have probably spent most of the time waiting in line to meet your advisor, for the doctor to look down your throat, taking tests for this, that and the other thing, and by the time you read this you will be going around in circles wishing that the authorities that be would let you alone for a few minutes and give you a rest. But before you crawl in and take this rest, just one thing—THE COLLEGE BOOK STORE. (We could go on and on about the way you have been running around, but we are paying for this ad, so we have to get our plugs in some place.) THE COLLEGE BOOK STORE AND RECORD SHOP is located at 129 West Beaver Avenue, between the Temple Market and The State College Flower Shop—just across the street from the Presbyterian Church. We are open all day, EVERY day, and in the evening until 9:30. Now that you have the location in mind, and you know that we are open for your convenience—allow us to go over the items we sell.

First and foremost we are a book store—the kind of book store you expect in a college town. We have all the new books—fiction, non-fiction and such. We invite you to come in to browse around, talk to us about your likes and dislikes in literature, and when you find something you like buy it and read it. We have a Rental Library which contains all the new fiction and mystery stories for those of you feel that all books are not worth buying—and we agree. We operate a Record Shop which specializes in Classical music. You are welcome to come in to listen to your favorite symphony or concerto either on the standard records or the new Columbia Long Playing Records. We also have popular records and children's records for those of you who wish to send little brother or sister a gift.

Our Greeting Cards are the best in town. We don't sell the ordinary, run-of-the-mill cards but different ones—the kind you really like to send. Our stationery and gift departments are small, but if you are looking for something really fine and different you will find it here.

You have undoubtedly seen the annual PENNSYLVANIA CALENDAR. Did you know that this was published by us? It is a local State College product and we are justly proud of it. Have you seen the black and white line of PENNSYLVANIA CARDS? This is just another item which we publish and distribute around the country.

So don't forget us. Come in and get acquainted, talk to us and make yourself at home. THE COLLEGE BOOK STORE is a Penn State tradition, and you will find that it will soon become a major part of your college life—the part of your college life you will enjoy most.
