Campus Magazine Starts Sale Today

"The Penn State Engineer," campus engineering magazine, is on sale today, according to George Bearer, editor. The first issue of the semester will contain a variety of scientific articles, features, and photo section.

Among the articles is "Electricity A State of Mind" by Robert Van Slambrouch, publication adviser and member of the journalism department. Other articles appearing in the magazine are "High Pressure Fire Fighting," "Susquehanna Power Giant," a story of the Sunbury power plant, and "The Scientific Method."

Issues will be on sale in front of the Corner Room and at Student Union.

Fraternities Greet Home Economics Club Displays Furniture

A display of furnishing suggestive of those which might be used in a living room, or a portion of a one-room apartment, will be the Home Economics exhibit at the Horticulture Show Saturday and Sunday.

The aim behind this exhibit is to portray an example of an attractive room that can be achieved by one person with a minimum outlay of cash, provided that person is resourceful and willing to use the saw and hammer.

The Home Economics booth will consist of a group of colorful screens used as separating walls to serve as a background for this display. The articles of furniture as well as accessories were designed and made by students enrolled in last year's classes in Home Art, under the guidance of their instructor, Douglas Lockwood, and Professors Sybil Emerson and Amy Gardner.

Branches of autumn leaves, flowers, and fruits will be effectively used in suggesting how attractive furnishings may be obtained on a modest budget. These seasonal materials of nature will serve to give the room a lively atmosphere.

Flooring of old bricks assembled by members of the Home Ec Club will be used to give a substantial base to the display. Visitors to the show are not to regard this flooring as being typically suggestive of a good display.

Nancy Curry, a senior in Home Economics, is chairman of the committee on arrangements, and is being assisted by student members of the Home Ec Club, Greeters Club, Omicron Nu, and Phi Upsilon Omicron, as well as members of the Home Ec staff in Home Art.

Unlisted Train Serves College

Train travelers coming to State College from New York, Washington, Philadelphia, and Harrisburg may now reach Lewistown each afternoon at 12:48 on the westbound "Metropolitan" of the Pennsylvania railroad.

The train is not listed on current schedules, according to H. L. Nancarrow, general manager of the P.R.R., but is being stopped at the request of Guy G. Mills, secretary of the State College Commerce Club, and James Milholland, acting president of the College.

Milholland and Mills asked that the train be stopped at Lewistown after the P.R.R. announced removal of Train No. 15, which stopped at Lewistown daily at 12:15 (EST).

The "Metropolitan" leaves New York at 8:01 a.m., Washington 8:10, Philadelphia, 9:35, and Harrisburg at 11:43. New schedules will list the stop.

Fraternities Greet—

Delta Theta also will combine a football theme along with the growth of the institution.

Phi Kappa Psi supplements its Lion and Spartan with a Varga girl welcoming back the alumni. Sigma Nu will demonstrate a lion with eyes that light and a tail that wags dangling a Spartan on the end of a yo-yo.

Phi Kappa Sigma traces not only the development of the coeds but also the building through the years, while Phi Kappa Tau shows progress in yet another way. From a farmer plowing in front of Old Main they show development up to a sophomore coed, inebriated, dragging a protesting Phi Tau past Old Main.

With a relief model of Old Main, Phi Sigma Delta will show that Penn State has grown. PIKA pages through the book of "Penn State Through the Years."

SAE will use a large clock to point out periods of College history in conjunction with its display. SPE will contrast early Ag school beginnings with the modern College, and Sigma Phi Sigma will revert to the New Look theme to contrast skirt hems through the years.

Theta Chi gets more serious with major events and periods in the history of school life. Theta Xi takes scenes from the cobwebs of the past by means of a simulated television screen showing through a large cobweb. Tringale traces the history of Joe College himself here at Penn State.

Lambda Chi Alpha's display pictures characters tracing the history of the school moving across a stage while Phi Epsilon Pi utilizes a calendar car crashing through a clock, on whose hands a coed and male student are sitting.

Chi Phi, too, traces the development of buildings, and Delta Sigma Phi gets back to football with a model of a football player of the past handing one of the gridiron greats of the present a football. Disregarding the season and the location, Phi Gamma Delta will utilize a South Sea Island theme, complete with cannibals and palm trees.

Alpha Sigma Phi classifies its display top secret, and is maintaining a "hush, hush" attitude until its unveiling tonight.

Phi Sigma Kappa

The newly elected officers of Phi Sigma Kappa are: David Billing, president; Charles Jones II vice-president; Joseph Jammal, secretary; Jack Swigart, treasurer; Donald Heard, inductor; Donald Keck, house manager; and John Roy, sentinel.

College Builds World's Largest Torpedo Tunnel

Step right up and see the site of the world's largest water tunnel. The tunnel, to be located on west campus between the new Foods Building and Atherton street, will be completed in 1949.

Built for the Navy Bureau of Ordnance, the tunnel will resemble an overgrown doughnut standing on its rim. It will range from 31 to 27 feet in height and from 12 to 4 feet in diameter, and will cost $2,250,000. If "unwound", the tube would measure 252 feet from end to end.

From its present humble beginning as a mammoth mud hole at the lower end of the golf course, will grow a modern rectangular brick building to house the gargantuan tunnel. The record breaking tunnel will boast a capacity of 100,000 gallons, twice that of the borough water tower.

In the test section of the tube, located at the center of the upper arch, models of all Navy aquatic equipment, including such things as propellers and submarine weapons, will be tested. Conditions simulating those of the article or the tropics can be achieved in experimentation.

Performances of the models will be viewed through the windows of the test section, and calibrated by an observer seated in an adjacent observation loft on the mezzanine. A 96 inch impeller, drive by a 1750 horsepower motor, will force the water through the tunnel. Thus the models can be subjected to any condition met in actual submarine experience.

Thieves Unknown

ROTC officials reported yesterday that efforts of local, campus and state police had yet turned up no clues in the theft of the top and a tire from a military jeep last week.

MCLANAHAN'S DRUG STORE

The BROWSE

"You're nuts to put an ad in THE COLLEGIAN this weekend," said Boccaccio, our cat. "No one pays any attention to books on a big weekend. Do you think students and returning alumni are going to come in the store when there are so many other things to do?"

We must admit we were rather amazed at Boccaccio. He is usually a very quiet cat and just follows us around without a sound. So when he spoke his mind this way, we just had to ponder it a bit. He has a point, but we feel there are two other ways of looking at it. First, IF... remember we said, "If" Michigan State beats us Saturday, you could console yourself by reading a good book, and feeling that after all, you did come to College to get an education. Then, if we win Saturday, you can celebrate the victory by spending some of that money you won by buying a book. "That's a hell of a way to celebrate a victory" . . . that damn cat again. "We're not so sure about that," we said. "What could be more appropriate than reading THE YOUNG LIONS, that great new novel by Irwin Shaw."

"Is it a football book?" asked Boccaccio. "Well . . . no . . . but it is a good book," we said, "and the title just suits Penn State." With that Boccaccio gave up and went to sleep right on our copy of the book—a brave cat. So rather than disturb him and get him talking again, we want to say in a hurry that THE YOUNG LIONS is really great. It is a war novel, much better than THE NAKED AND THE DEAD. And it's five cents cheaper—$3.95. We feel that it is the best war novel to date, and one that your sons will probably be required to read in English Lit when they come to State. In all seriousness, we feel it is the one book you should read. DON'T MISS IT. "Well, I'll be . . ." There's Boccaccio at the window with a big hunk of Spartan uniform in his mouth . . .
