

Good Housekeeping Positions Available To Home Ec. Majors

A program for a six months post-graduate course in home economics in which the students will be paid while learning was announced today by Good Housekeeping magazine.

Beginning February 1, 1949, Good Housekeeping, in collaboration with The American Home Economics Association will offer a six-months training course in the laboratories of Good Housekeeping Institute to a limited group of home economics graduates.

Those who may apply include home economics graduates and seniors with a major in any of the fields of home economics.

No graduate will be eligible who has been previously employed, after graduating, as a home economist in business. However, vacation jobs and field work during school years will count in favor of an applicant.

A Bachelor's degree in Home Economics will be required of all applicants who are accepted but seniors who expect to be graduated in January, 1949, may apply in anticipation of receiving a degree.

Application must be made on application blanks provided by Good Housekeeping Institute. Students may obtain application
