NAACP Needs Help

Many people have heard of NAACP. But they ask "What is it? What does it do?"

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People is composed of one-half million American citizens, of all races, creeds, and colors, working for full equality of every citizen. It opposes racial segregation and discrimination in every field, including housing, employment, education, law, recreation, travel and the armed forces.

The NAACP is not restricted to Negroes. It was founded by white people, and is actively run by white and Negro together. Nor does the NAACP restrict itself to Negro problems alone, but dedicates itself to any minority group that needs help, socially or legally.

The local chapter of the NAACP is campaigning for new members this week. The members want people to work and think with them, and to share with them the social satisfaction of belonging to such a group.

The local chapter furthers its cause with social national forums. It carries on an active program mixers, picnics, record programs, cultural and educational that brings together all creeds and races in working cooperatively together for the immediate benefit of its own members.

Civil rights is a vital issue today in Congress, on campus, and in our own minds. NAACP offers an opportunity to personally meet—and solve—the problems of racial and religious discrimination.

Anyone who has any feeling against discrimination owes it to himself to take an active part in NAACP's cause of planning, working and leading a democratic program.

A booth will be maintained this week in the lobby of Old Main where any interested person may receive literature on the NAACP and sign up for membership. The chapter meets every Wednesday, time and place announced in the Daily Collegian.

Don't sit on the sidelines of this important work. Join today.

Blue Key Takes Step

After careful planning and extensive study the first, and biggest, step of an organized program of extending hospitality and good will to visiting athletes has been inaugurated by Blue Key, junior man's hat society.

Through the efforts of Blue Key an eight page booklet entitled "Blue Key Hat Society Welcomes You to Penn State" is in its planning stage and should be completed by the time the curtain is raised on the winter athletic program at Rec Hall.

Biggest obstacle at the present time is the money raising question but Blue Key president William Shade announced that by the end of next week even this problem will be hurdled.

The eight-page pamphlet will include pictures of the Penn State campus as well as a brief outline of the College's history, a list of fraternities and sororities and their phone numbers, sport pictures, a list of all varsity sports, their captains and coaches.

Another step in extending hospitality to visiting athletes will be form letters which will be sent to members of incoming teams asking them how many members would like to be entertained by their respective fraternities and how many would like to eat in fraternity houses, a plan which has been sanctioned by the IFC.

The first step is always the hardest. Now that something has been done to extend the Penn State spirit and hospitality to students of other schools let's keep improving more and more so that we can truly be proud of Penn State, its campus and its traditions.

Guests Can't Eat

TO THE EDITOR: Many of us students entertained our out-of-town guests and friends at the College this past weekend. According to the "rules and regulations" of the College, we students are not permitted to take our guests into the College dining commons even if they are willing to pay for their meals. If we were allowed to bring them to weekend meals for a reasonable charge, the students would not be required to pay for two meals, those meals we did not eat plus another meal purchased in town, and the College could use the money collected from guest tickets for improvement of the menu.

The officials of the dining commons and the dieticians seem to feel they are doing a good job in meal preparation and planning. If they are confident in themselves and their work, surely they will agree to permit students to bring their weekend guests to the dining commons for a reasonable charge.

Almost every large college campus has facilities to provide meals for guests of the students. We are proud of our College. Let us show our guests and friends some warm Penn State hospitality.
