State College Reminds Prof Of Flatter Part of Norway

Dr. Oivind Nissen, instructor in field plot techniques and forage crop breeding, has found a temporary home in America. He is here on a traveling fellowship from the Norwegian government.
 Dr. Nissen was formerly an instructor in farm crops at the Agricultural College of Norway, near Oslo. Following his arrival in January, he spent three months at Beltsville, Md., location of large experimental farms and laboratories of the United States Department of Agriculture.
 From Beltsville, Dr. Nissen journeyed to Cornell University, spending three months there as a visiting staff member. Then he spent a month at the North Carolina State College, Raleigh, and one month at the University of Wisconsin, Madison. He came here to teach at the beginning of the semester.
 When the American Society of Agronomists met at Ft. Collins, Colo., prior to the fall semester, Dr. Nissen was among the visitors.
 The Norwegian teacher was graduated from the Agricultural College of Norway in 1933. Then he took graduate courses in plant breeding work at various schools in Sweden and England. He finished his doctorate degree work at his Alma Mater just before sailing to America.
Wife Joins Children
 On November 3, his wife sailed from New York in order to be with their three children during the Christmas season. They have two sons, Per, 12, and Dag, 5, and one daughter, Siri, 10. These children, under the Norwegian school system, are given courses in English beginning with the sixth grade. Aasta Nissen, who thinks nine months is a long time to be away from her children, was anxious to see them once again. Dr. Nissen says her voyage home was a stormy trip, taking 11 days to reach Oslo instead of the usual 10.

 On the subject of Christmas, Dr. Nissen says he believes Americans commercialize the holiday more than they do in Norway. He comments that "Santa Claus doesn't appear so soon in Norway as he does here." As he has never spent a Christmas in America, he will not venture to compare it with a Norwegian one, but he imagines Christmas is the same all over the world.
 Dr. Nissen has no immediate plans for the future after this semester, but he hopes he can stay in America for some time. He likes State College because the terrain reminds him of the flat part of Norway near the Agricultural College.

In the Land of Jim Crow--

 in the South—and for that matter in the North, too.
 And when you hear a cultured, educated Negro, doctor, lawyer, educator casually remark, "My mother was sold down from Virginia to a breeding plantation in South Georgia"—Well you realize that you're not so far away from barbarism after all.
 That pattern of 250 years of slavery still endures in the South. For 250 years, for instance, it was a crime, in some places, to teach a slave to read and write. And looking at some of the Negro schools in the South, it must still be a crime.
 Discrimination, denial of the franchise to the black man, the South's indifference to wanton murder of a Negro—all these, Negroes say, exist because the psychology of slavery still endures in the mind of the white South. Maybe that's what a Negro friend of mine, a $20,000-a-year executive of a big corporation, had in mind when he told me before I started on this adventure:
 "You're going to learn that it's hell to be a Negro in the South."
 Final Word to White Man
 One thing more as this chronicle draws to a close. I don't know if anybody in the South will read these articles. But if they do I hope no Negro gets killed or harmed because of them. No Negro that I talked to had any idea that he was going to be quoted. He thought he was just talking to a fellow black man from the North who wanted to find out how his people lived in the South. In many episodes related I have changed names and even locations. But where the story involves relations with the whites, the white man concerned is going to know that a Negro talked. I hope he'll have forbearance in his heart.
 And finally too, one last word to the white man in the South from a Negro, even though a temporary one.
 Don't be concerned that the Negro seeks to rise to the stature of manhood and American citizenship.

 Don't worry about him defiling either your hotels or restaurants or, above all, your race. Not one Negro did I meet who wanted to associate with white folks. True, all of them condemned segregation bitterly. But as they talked on, it developed that it was discrimination rather than mere segregation that they hated. Every man and woman I talked to, field hand or educator, betrayed the fact that he wanted as little contact with the white world as possible.
 But here are a few things with which, it seems to me no decent Southerner could quarrel.
Plea for the Franchise
 Quit killing us wantonly just to try out a new gun, or to teach us that it's not good for us to try to vote, or just because you "don't like a damn nigger nohow."
 Next, let us exercise the franchise guaranteed us by the Constitution and the Supreme Court. You'll never see a Negro party in the South. You'll find that the Negro vote, when there is one, is going to split along the same lines as the white vote.
 Give our children a decent chance at a decent education—the same kind of an education that you want for your children. And give our young men and women a chance for a university education—in law, medicine, engineering. We might even be of service to you.
 Surely none of that is going to destroy the way of life of the white South. It probably won't even appreciably dent white supremacy.
