'Tru-Blus' To Appear, Defy Lombardo Fans

Members of a self-styled Guy Lombardo fan club organized picket lines in front of Schwab yesterday denouncing NSA's jazz concert. Carrying placards with slogans like "Tru-Blu, we hate you" and "Gentlemen of distinction listen to Guy Lombardo," the pickets attempted a boycott of the Tru-Blu Sextet program scheduled for tonight.

Ticket sales will continue in spite of this attempted interference, according to Jane Fouracre, campus NSA chairman.

Called Subversive

James Dunaway, promotion manager for the concert said that NSA "will not be intimidated by this subversive organization and its boycott. The Tru-Blu's program will be presented as scheduled."

"Wild Dave" Briner and

"Stash" Collins, both members of the combo which has been moved from the Paradise Cafe for the evening, expressed surprise at the boycott. Collins stated that the jazz versus long hair battle was a "hot issue." Briner expressed the hope that the boycott would not affect the box office adversely for he had a new beret made for the concert.

Jazz Classics

The program, which will begin at 7:30 p.m., will feature jazz classics including "Heebie Jeebies," "High Society," and the original "Dixieland One-Step," plus the Tru-Blu antics which have long been popular with solid characters on campus.

Tickets for the concert, priced at fifty cents, are on sale at Student Union and in front of the Corner Room. They will also be available at Schwab tonight.

Supervisor Promises Action on Food Grips

Music Students Present Recital

Another in the series of student recitals sponsored by the music department will be presented in 117 Carnegie Hall, 8:30 p.m. today.

The program will include vocal selections by Joseph Cortese, LeRoy Hinkle, Alice McFeely and Selma Rudnick, all under the direction of Mrs. Elizabeth Reynolds, instructor in music.

Marilyn Guillet, studying under Barry S. Brinsmaid, assistant professor of music, will present a piano selection.

Thaddeus Komorowski, baritone, will also sing with Joan O'Hara accompanying him at the piano.

Mildred A. Baker, supervisor of dining commons, promised to "work on" two grievances listed by men eating in Nittany dining commons, and answered other complaints at Monday night's meeting of the Cabinet food committee, Nittany and Pollock Circle dorm representatives, and College officials.

To grant the request for a later Sunday breakfast, Miss Baker said, would create a problem in preparation of the noon meal. Advancing the hour of this meal, a solution proposed by the men, is not feasible now, since employees "like Sunday afternoon off."

"I will work on this problem," the supervisor said.

She also promised to talk over with the food staff the call by some men for a "full breakfast."

Miss Baker assured those present that all meat is bought from reputable dealers.

The meeting was regarded by the Cabinet food committee as one more step in its attempt to solve the food problem.

Lewis Stone, editor of the Daily Collegian and a member of the committee, will have a summary of the meeting mimeographed for distribution to all men in the area early in the second semester.

Boro Council Upholds All-Night Parking Ban

In spite of the numerous requests from students, townspeople and fraternities, State College Boro Council voted Monday to uphold the ordinance prohibiting all-night parking on the boro streets and referred the matter to the Borough Planning Commission.

A second ordinance under discussion, the rule prohibiting minors from entering licensed liquor places unless accompanied by parents or guardians, was vetoed by Burgess Albert E. Yougel.

The parking ordinance, passed in 1938, was ignored by the State College police until recently when 506 parking tickets were issued shortly after the Christmas holidays.

Interpretation

According to the ordinance, it is illegal to park on the borough streets from 2 to 6 a.m. Under a liberal interpretation of the law, car owners were formerly given tickets only when their cars impeded the work of the snow plow, but strictly interpreted, any parking between those hours would constitute a violation.

Burgess Yougel stated that he will continue to enforce the law as long as it remains on the books in its present state.

Council President Edward Keller said in a reply to a citizen's request that the ordinance be repealed, "What you do with your car is your problem. All that concerns the Council is that it is kept off the streets overnight."

Fire Hazard

A letter from the Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity stating that there are 15 to 18 cars in their driveway every night creating a fire hazard was read, but no action will be taken until the planning commission presents its report February 7.

The Burgess stated in his veto letter that the law couldn't be effectively enforced and that the job being done by the police is sufficient without such an ordinance.

The minor's ordinance, passed by a vote of four-to-three, requires a vote of five-to-two to enact it over the veto.

The Council postponed action on the veto until the next regular meeting in February.

Analyst Denies Imminence Of Possible War With Russia

By Florence Feinberg

There is no danger of war with Russia in the immediate future or in the next few years, said Quincy Howe, CBS news analyst, in his address before the Community Forum in Schwab Auditorium last night.

Mr. Howe told the audience that the real danger that exists is in the thinking that there must be one kind of world, either a Russian type or an American one.

No Policy Change

"I do not think there will be a softening of policy towards Russia as a result of Dean Acheson's appointment as Secretary of State," said Mr. Howe. "Much more likely there will be a recognition by both countries of their own capacities and power."

"We here in the United States are misled by the excitement of spy and war scares. We have the misinformed, and the Russians have the Cominform," he said.

More U.S. Aid

Mr. Howe emphasized the need for more American aid to Europe and the continuation of the Berlin airlift. The cost of the airlift is small in comparison to other military expenditures, and we should remain in Berlin until the Russians begin to use force. We should not, however, go to war over Berlin, he said.

CAN-CAN CUTIES, one of the big attractions of "Ten Nights in a Barroom" which closes a seven-week stay at Center Stage Saturday night, are represented by the three above. Rene Burickson, Joan Lappin and Cyvia Feldman display some of their more obvious charms.

'10 Nights' Ends Successful Run

Players' production of "Ten Nights in a Barroom," melodramatic temperance farce, will end its seven-week stay at Center Stage with closing performances Friday and Saturday nights.

A limited number of tickets is still available at Student Union for both performances, although ticket sales early this week have been brisk.

"Ten Nights," originally written as a straight drama, has been converted into a purposely corny laugh-getter by Director Robert Reifsnieder.

Ruth McKibbin, as Mary Morgan the drunkard's daughter; Daniel Wargo, as Joe Morgan, a drunkard; and Jean Bickerton, in the role of Mehitabel Cartright, a sentimental Yankee girl, share leading roles.

Other top-flight performers are Henry Glass, Richard Lashley, and Robert McLean. An additional attraction is a genuine can-can chorus.

Musical numbers, most of them revived from years back, include "She May Have Seen Better Days," "Little Lost Child," and "She Is More To Be Pitied Than Censured."

The show received good notices from Malcolm White, Daily Collegian critic, and has had exceptional success at the box office for past performances.
