On Penn State

Yesterday we printed, in entirety, the reply of Cyril Canterman, a Penn student, to our recent discourse on why Penn and Penn State should meet annually on the football field.

Although Mother told us when we left home never to "lock horns in debate," we cannot fend the urge to comment on Mr. Canterman's points.

Trying to explain Penn's scheduling policy, which we dubbed "inscrutable," he says, "Penn, as an Ivy League school, maintains athletic relationships with other Ivy League schools. These ancient rivalries, encrusted in Ivy League tradition, are of long standing, and many of them have become traditional with the school. So it is natural that Ivy League teams should be prominent on Penn's football slate each year."

—That Penn should want to maintain Ivy League "traditions" is commendable in our mind, but what determines a traditional rivalry? If number of years spanned by a grid series is the criterion, then the Penn-Penn State relationship is as much a tradition as two of four of Penn's Ivy League contacts on which we have facts.

Penn State first played Penn in 1890; Ivy Leaguers Cornell and Dartmouth did not do that till 1893 and 1896. Princeton and Columbia—the other two Ivy teams which our data covers—began meeting Penn earlier than did Penn State, in 1876 and 1878 respectively.

If tradition is determined by number of games, then the Penn-Penn State series ranks as a more solid tradition than either the Dartmouth-Penn or Columbia-Penn skeins. Penn has encountered Dartmouth 18 times, Columbia 30, Penn State 39, Princeton 41 and Cornell 54. Thus, we do not disclaim Penn's Ivy League connections, but maintain that the Penn-Penn State tie is in fact at least as strong as that with certain Ivy elevens.

Mr. Canterman also says: "In addition, Penn traditionally plays each of the two service academies. . . . These teams, plus one or two inter-regional or inter-sectional teams, comprise Penn's gridiron schedule each year."

—We certainly don't want to deprive Penn of the Navy and Army games. Nowadays almost any school considers its schedule attractive if Army or Navy graces the slate. (Penn, incidentally, has battled Navy 32 times, Army 9.)

We think that an annual Penn-Penn State game is justifiable, and an end to be sought by both parties, because there is undeniably much more to be gained—financially, traditionally and in prestige—than from, say, a Penn-Virginia game of '47, a Penn-Lafayette game of '47 or a Penn-Wash-Lee game of '48. In other words, call it what you will—perhaps "inter-regional"—but still stage a Penn-Penn State game yearly. It once was a tradition: From 1890 through 1939, only 12 years passed without a Penn-Penn State gridiron battle.

Our correspondent leans our way when he states: "Many of us here at Penn would like to see more frequent athletic encounters with Penn State, and we hope that such will be possible in the near future."

—If Penn seeks to perpetuate old, traditional ties, there are few

Oberg, Henry Reach Finals In IM Handball Tourney

Two men survived early-round competition in handball singles to become finalists in the fraternity championship flight. Art Oberg, Pi Kappa Alpha, and Vane Henry, Phi Gamma Delta, are the only players remaining undefeated in almost a month of fast handball action which 107 men began.

Ten of 13 men started the flight in first-round battles last Thursday. George Freeman, Phi Kappa Tau, defeated Tom Smith, Delta Upsilon, 21-6, 21-12; Art Oberg trounced John McHugh, Phi Kappa Sigma, 21-3, 21-5; John Woche, Sigma Alpha Epsilon, edged Marvin Goldenberg, Pi Lambda Phi, 21-14, 18-21, 21-10; Vane Henry downed Duane Snyder, Tau Kappa Epsilon, 21-14, 21-8; and Jerry Wolf, Alpha Epsilon Pi, bested Bob Kolarik, Lambda Chi Alpha, 21-14, 21-18.

The quarter-final round saw Freeman win over John Frasinelli, Delta Upsilon, 21-12, 21-11; Oberg eliminated Joe Tocci, Alpha Chi Rho, 21-18, 21-13; Art Schneider, Zeta Beta Tau, edged Woche, 21-17, 9-21, 21-2; and Henry entered the semi-finals by defeating Wolf, 21-6, 21-8.

Oberg had to use three games in the semi-finals but finally conquered Freeman, 13-21, 21-4, 21-13.
