

Early School Books On View In Library

Teachers at the College studying the latest methods and developments in education now can take a glance back in time by examining a display of textbooks printed and used in Pennsylvania over 100 years ago.

The books, culled from the Library's collection of rare Pennsylvania imprints, now are on view in the second-floor exhibit cases at the Library. They range in date from 1770 to 1849 and were printed in 11 Pennsylvania towns.

Local Interest

Of special local interest is a copybook used in Stover school, also known as Wolf Chapel school, which was started in 1789, two miles east of Aaronsburg. It was the first school in Haines Township and one of the first in Centre County.

The copybook, which was a recent gift to the Library from Harry A. Leitzell, Sr., of State College, bears the name of James Duncan, first Aaronsburg storekeeper, and his son, Thomas. The copybook contains the rudiments of reading, writing, and arithmetic, and the arithmetic examples show problems in pounds, shillings, and pence, as well as dollars, cents, and mills.

The exhibit includes a Noah Webster "blue-back" spelling book printed in Philadelphia in 1830; English, Latin, and German grammars; geographies; a Gurney shorthand book printed in Philadelphia in 1799; and ABC books printed in German in Reading, Allentown, Germantown, Harrisburg, and other Pennsylvania cities.

Dairy Profs---

Among recent contributions to the industry, Prof. Doan reported on the concentrating and freezing of whole milk for storage, a process being used by many manufacturers. He also has reported on analysis of trial and testing methods for milk and milk products.

A graduate of Penn State in 1922, Professor Doan taught dairying at the University of Maryland from 1922 to 1925 when he returned to his alma mater where he won his master's degree in 1925. He has been teaching and conducting research at Penn State since 1925. Many of Prof. Doan's former pupils are now engaged in research and other prominent positions in the dairy industry.

He is a member of Theta Chi, Gamma Sigma Delta, honorary agricultural fraternity, Sigma Xi, national research fraternity, the American Dairy Science Association and the International Association of Milk Sanitarians.
