

Who Belongs

Heard from time to time on campus is this comment: "Someone in my dorm belongs to that NSA" or, "A fellow in my botany class is a member of the National Student Association."

These remarks are evidence of a prevalent misconception about the membership of NSA—a misconception that the National Student Association is an organization of small branches or chapters on campuses and that only a select few really "belong."

At Penn State, where the student government has ratified the NSA constitution and membership dues have been paid, all the students are members of the Association and share equally the opportunity to participate in NSA-instituted programs.

IT'S NATURAL THAT in an organization of such a large national membership a smaller functional unit on each campus is necessary.

THE FUNCTIONAL UNIT of NSA at Penn State, as at other colleges, is student government. However, All-College Cabinet—highest unit of student government at the College—has found it necessary to set up a committee whose task is to familiarize students with NSA activity and to study many projects suggested by the nation-wide NSA and by Penn State students.

This NSA committee should not be permitted to become a small clique of individuals who try to be the sole participants in all NSA projects at Penn State. Rather the committee should constantly work to bring the entire campus NSA—the entire student body—into the activities of the Association.

One certain way in which students can quickly learn to love this institution is in walks about the grounds. The grounds of the University are known throughout the world as a unique vista of scenic beauty.

NOT SO MANY months ago everyone was looking for a house. Now you can't even give one away.

That's been the experience of the Stiles Hall YMCA people in their week-long efforts to give away a good solid three-story building.

The house, which is offered free to anyone who will take it away from the corner of Dana street and Bancroft way is a former home of the Delta Upsilon and Alpha Delt fraternities.

The YMCA acquired the house in order to get the lot for their new modern hall, which is to be started in January. But now the problem is to get the site cleared quickly. There have been several nibbles but no takers. The only possible catch is that the YMCA wants an assurance bond given to insure that the old will be removed in time to start the new.

The drop in enrollment . . . should mean several things to Syracuse University.

There will be more time for the University to educate and for students to be educated.

It should mean that individual instruction can be given to students where it was impossible to do so in the past due to the extra-large size of classes.

As enrollment continues to drop, . . . let us plan wisely for this decrease as we planned wisely for the tremendous increase in the recent past.

—The Syracuse Daily Orange, Syracuse University

The University has this year achieved the status of being the largest institute of higher education in the state—its 10,000—plus student body is larger even than that of the University of Florida.

And it seems as if each of these 10,000—plus students owns a car this year.

The traffic situation on the campus is far from ideal—parking space is almost unobtainable . . . .

What They Deserve

TO THE EDITOR: The recent letters in the Collegian concerning the import situation merely substantiates what so many of us men students have maintained for such a long time concerning the Penn State coed. What do we maintain? Primemost that the Penn State coed is not the type girl that most men students would want to escort to a major event such as the recent dance; secondly, that the Penn State coed has no more personality than "the man in the moon;" thirdly, that they pretend conceit when they have nothing to act conceited about, and last of all, they don't know how to be themselves, meaning everything about them is false and pretended.

We the undersigned, regard the recent import letter as a frank admittal on the coeds' part that they lack what is important in the form of personality, poise, and good clean fun necessary to attract a man.

Contented Coeds

TO THE EDITOR: To enter into the battle of the sexes at Penn State:

1. We are two females.
2. We go to whatever mixers we can.
3. We return any friendly gestures made by men.
4. We have absolutely NO trouble with date bids. In fact, we're wondering when we're ever going to get around to this 24-hour study cycle that is expected of graduate students.
5. In the long run, we just about divvy up our date-time with fraternity and independent men. We have no preference. We merely try to be discreet in that we accept dates with those chaps who have our type personality (whatever that is).
6. We prefer spontaneous dates. We rarely accept dates more than a few days in advance (unless it's for a special night). During the war, GI's were in no position to date in advance. We come from that school of thought. Besides, dates for the same night can be accepted or declined in order to fit the mood. More fun that way.
7. Condolences to the date-less girls. Good for the imports. And, a big HOORAH for the men . . . especially those men who won't take a date sight unseen.

—The Contented Two.
