Debaters---

Speaking of the College, Day said that our system of having several different schools for a college on one campus, seemed an excellent idea to him. Oxford University is divided into several colleges, each actually separate institutions in themselves.

"Penn State's debaters are very good," Day went on to say, "and they made our position in the debate quite difficult, but by being difficult, much more enjoyable at the same time."

When questioned as to his dramatic ability, Johnson-Smith modestly insisted that he had never done much acting of any particular note, one of his best parts being that of General U. S. Grant in John Drinkwater's play, "Abraham Lincoln." Day, on overhearing this, differed with his colleagues, saying that he thought Johnson-Smith's best role was probably that of the third spear carrier in Shakespeare's "Julius Caesar."

Sweden Nixes Nobel Award

Carl Sandburg, noted poet and Lincoln biographer, who will speak in State College on January 11 on the Community Forum series, was announced Friday as one of the top contenders for the Nobel prize in literature before the Swedish Academy decided to make no award this year. Charles Poore, literary critic for the New York Times, commenting on the announcement, said on Saturday that he hoped Sandburg and William Faulkner, also considered, would be considered again next year when the awards are made.
